Thompson Smith's saw mill at Duncan City, one of the largest in this portion of Northern Michigan, and valued at $75,000, together with lumber, principally dry, to the amount of $25,000 burned on the 11th.

THE Petoskey Record is a good paper, but in its excessive desire to spread itself over more egos than nature designed it to cover, it don't always hatch out the truth. We are willing that the truth should be told at all times, but the envious, and sometimes unjust enemies of Charlevoix find a willing and capable organ in the Record, which is right up to the scratch on every occasion, even if a little multiplication is indulged in, as to facts.

THE Sabbath School Concert held at the M. E. Church, Sunday evening was a very pleasant affair. To those who took part in the exercise, its success was a surprise. As compared with the other concerts held in Charlevoix last winter, this entertainment was simply immense.

ALREADY the third of summer travel has set in for Charlevoix. Several parties have arrived, and hotels and private houses are daily in receipt of letters from all quarters, engaging accommodations for the summer. It is expected that a greater number will spend the season here than during any previous summer.

TRUSTEE BUTTARS was clerk pro tem of this Village Council two weeks ago. The Council won't repeat the experiment. Their efforts at the last meeting to decipher the minutes caused the realization to creep over their minds, that in the event of his death the proceedings of the honorable body would pass into oblivion.

WE are in receipt of a notice to the effect, that, the First Annual Fair of the Western Michigan Agricultural and Industrial Society will be held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, commencing Monday, Sept. 22, and holding six days. RESORT NEWS—M. W. Roberts, of Kalamazoo, has taken the contract from the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association, for the erection of a boarding house on the north east corner of their grounds. It will be 30x50 on the ground and 22 feet posts. The terms of the contract require its completion July 10. Mr. Roberts will also erect two or more cottages for members of the association. He is expected here this week.

The new Homestead Act passed just before the adjournment of the last Congress allows homesteaders upon even-numbered sections of railroad land-grants who have heretofore been allowed to enter only 80 acres of those "double minimum" lands, to enter 80 acres more, adjoining the original entry, or if there is none adjoining, they may, if they choose, relinquish entries already made for the purpose of entering another where 160 acres can be obtained.

A petition, addressed to the President of the United States, has been in circulation among the Liberals of this place, during the past week, to secure the pardon of D. M. Bennet, editor of the Truth Seeker, convicted of sending obscene matter through the mail and sentenced to 13 months hard labor in the Albany penitentiary, and a fine of $300. The principal argument embodied in the petition is the injustice done to D. M. Bennet in excluding evidence and an improper animus on the part of Comstock, the prosecutor

W. A. SMITH, editor of the SENTINEL, is in Chicago, as is the Great London Circus. We simply state these as facts. it is not likely the managers of that show knew that the SENTINAL man was to be in Chicago, nor yet do we know that our editor conclusion the presence of that great combination as any inducement to make the trip, but this we do know that if any of "our" subscribers have any curcy varieties of strawberries, or garden "sass" of which they would like mention made to the SENTINEL the editor's absence need not deter their coming, provided they bring a fair sample of the article along with them

"DEVIL"

THE Grand Rapids Times is in receipt of a dispatch stating that Thompson Smith, of Cheboygan, has been arrested at that place for cutting pine from Government land. Mr. Smith is estimated to be worth $3,000,000 and owns the entire site of Duncan City. He will be examined shortly before Commissioner Call at Petoskey.

ANTRIM County is again in a state of excitment. This time it is the notorious Ole Randal, a character well known in this county on account of his connection with the Swan murder. At present the most Randal forced himself into public notice by an attempted outrage upon the person of Mrs. Charles Arnold. Randal, noting the absence of Mr. Arnold, repaired to the house and after gaining admittance, locked the door and attempted the accomplishment of his nefarious deed. Mrs. Arnold succeeded in escaping by means of a back door, and after gaining the freedom of the open air, she eluded her pursuer until she reached her husband. Randal was given notice to quit the county in short order. He did as directed. We believe justice, and a due regard for the interests of mankind in general, should have detained him until he had received the just deserts for his many crimes CHARLEVOIXIANA are soon to have the luxury of a driving park, provided, suitable encouragement is given to those who have undertaken the project. The park is to be located about one half mile out of the village on the farm of J. Milo Eaton. Work has already been commenced on the track which is to be one-half mile in length. There being several fast nags in town, we feel safe in saying this enterprise will meet with the hearty approval of a goodly number of our citizens. The condition of the roads in Charlevoix being such as to preclude fast driving, this park will provide for a long felt want. Let suitable encouragement in the way of stamps and days work be extended to those who have undertaken the affair, and this speedily too, as the 4th is nearly at hand. In return for such favors as those mentioned above, the park will be at the service of those who assist in bringing it to completion.

THE RUSSIAN TERROR.

A Visit of the Secret Police—A Professor of the University Marched to Prison Without Explanation—Kept in a Filthy Hole and Discharged Without Redress.

The scant ceremony with which the Russian police treat even gentlemen of repute and position may be gathered from the following incident, which has occurred within the last few days. There reside in St. Petersburg two brothers named Faminzin. They are both highly respected in society and well known throughout the city generally. The elder of the two enjoys a considerable reputation as one of the Professors of the University, a dignity conferred upon him with the title of "Excellency," and the younger brother is no less esteemed as an excellent musician, much admired for his talents as composer of ecrite far beyond the limits of St. Petersburg.

During the night of last Saturday week a number of armed men belonging to the police made their appearance at the unobtrusive and generally undisturbed residence of Prof. Faminzin. There were fifteen gendarmes, under command of an officer of the force. The professor, who, of course, was fast asleep at the time, was suddenly summoned from his bed, and he was courteously informed by the chief of the party that the superior authorities had ordered them to search the whole of his chambers. "Good," replied Faminzin; "act precisely in accordance with your instructions." Then commenced a search and rummaging of the valuable library formed by the professor, the volumes being handled, or rather ill-treated, in a manner that sent a cold shudder creeping over the worthy savant's skin. The precious works were strewn about the floor, trampled on by the far from considerate feet of the police, the pages were torn open and pulled out of the binding to discover the existence of compromising documents. As soon as the search of the premises was finished, the officer in command of the police turned to Faminzin, and, with the utmost respect, addressed him: "Your Excellency, I am extremely sorry, but I must request you, as well as monsieur your brother, to accompany me. It is by order of the superior authorities." "If it be, as you say, by order of higher officers," answered the professor, "fulfill the instructions with which you have been commissioned!" The two gentlemen, who reside together, dressed as quickly as possible, and were placed in the center of the gendarme party, who, guarding the brothers in their midst, marched off with them.

Naturally, Prof. Faminzin, as well as his brother, was under the impression that they would immediately be carried before the authorities at what is called Third Section, who are the principal police functionaries of the capital. This, however, was not the case, for the procession halted in the Isendsdorf Peraulok, in front of the prison wherein convicts awaiting and condemned to Siberian banishment are confined previous to their deportation. Here the two prisoners, for such they now considered themselves, were directed to enter, and were then separated, each being marched off by himself to a distant part of the jail. The professor was interned in a foul, musty wall compartment measuring by the ounce of a cell, four paces in length and two broad—a place of incarceration in which surely no other country, even semi-civilized, ever confined a man entitled to the appellation of "Excellency," and who had, moreover, been accused of no crime, no offense, or even imprudence. The walls of the cell were damp, cold, chill, the bed unclean and tenanted already by guests as noxious and nasty as they were unbidden and unwelcome. "At least," cried the now unhappy professor, "let me have a dry cell." "Your Excellency," responded the imperturbable and still extremely courteous chief, "I regret the fact beyond measure, but all the other cells in the prison are quite crowded." Unable to accommodate himself to the resting-place provided, the unfortunate Faminzin passed the remainder of the night in his clothes, and, it is scarcely necessary to add, without indulging in any sleep. Long and weary were the hours, slowly and heavily jogged the time to the weary inmate of this not-some abode.

At length about eleven o'clock the following morning, his persecutors reappeared. "Be good enough to strip," was now the order addressed to the prisoner; "we must search your person thoroughly. Against this indignity, however, the professor protested most energetically, and, fortunately for the learned gentleman, the Chief of Police, who had taken him into charge the previous evening, entered the cell just then. The officer was, as before, extremely courteous, regretted very, very much, and was sorry to an inexpressible extent, etc., but insisted upon the personal examination. The professor, however, refused, in the most decided manner to yield on this point, and the officer, not wishing or caring to employ force for the purpose, yielded to the prisoner's objections. Faminzin was, however, still pelled to deliver up to the authorities everything upon his person, including a small work on "Organic Chemistry," which he had brought with him the previous night to help him to while away the lonely and wearisome hours he too surely anticipated. He begged them to leave him the book, as the confinement was unendurable without some means of passing the time. But in vain. The volume was regarded as an important and noteworthy find, and the insignificant tome was dragged off in triumph by the officers. At dinner another pleasure of a different kind awaited his "Excellency," the professor. A bowl of soup was brought to him during the afternoon. This constituted the first course, which he had to sup with a wooden spoon, from which those who had previously been permitted to use this useful domestic contrivance had managed, in their Siberian hunger, to bite the best part, leaving, in fact, little of the utensil but the shank. The soup duly enjoyed by the aid of the Russian rhopatick, the second course was reserved to the hungry professor in the shape of a piece of beef, which was brought on a dirty wooden platter accompanied by either knife or fork. "You have forgotten the table accessories," was the mild reminder upon which the prisoner ventured. "Not at all," answered the Jailer, "not at all, Your Excellency. Persons arrested are never permitted the use of either knife or fork, in order to prevent them from either cutting their throats or opening an artery." A pleasant prospect, truly, the professor must have thought; and, without further ado, set to work upon his meal, and carved with the tool by the aid of his fingers, in the simple and Arcadian fashion of primitive times.

The cell in the old quay was now so foul, the air so oppressive, and the monotony and loneliness so inexpressibly irksome to Faminzin that he implored the attendants to permit him to walk in the court-yard of the prison, if only for a few moments. The petition was graciously granted to the Governor of the Jail, and the requisite leave was granted. Accordingly the "Professor-Excellency" was marched into the quadrangle, a couple of infantrymen were called out, their rifles were loaded, and, with one of these amiable guards in front and one behind him, he promenaded the court-yard to and fro. Five minutes of this was, however, sufficient for Faminzin, and he retired precipitately to his cell.

Here, in the damp, filthy hole, full of dirt and covered with vermin, his Excellency the Professor of the University of St. Petersburg remained, without any intimation of his offense, without any information as to his fate or that of his brother, all day Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. It was on the latter day that Faminzin was let off for intelligence as to the cause of his arrest. Even the pitiful request, often repeated, that his volume on "Organic Chemistry" should be restored to him, that, by reading, the hours might seem less depressing and wearisome, was denied. On Thursday the courteous Chief of the Police reappeared, polite and unimpressionable as before, and said, "Your Excellency, I have the great happiness and much greater pleasure to inform you that you are now free." On reaching his residence Prof. Faminzin found his brother, who, less fortunate than his "Excellency," had fared far otherwise. Having no intercessor in the shape of an urbane, if unperturbable, Chief of Police, the musician had been compelled to remove his clothing the first day of his incarceration, and submit to a critical personal examination—for what purpose, under the circumstances, it is impossible to conjecture. Immediately after his arrival at home, Prof. Faminzin proceeded to the Imperial of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, Count Lutke. The noble personage was totally unaware of the fact that one of his professors had been imprisoned for five days in the most notorious Jail in St. Petersburg. Faminzin, bitterly aggrieved by the conduct of the police and the treatment he had experienced, applied to his special friend and protector, the Grand Duke Constantine. The professor described graphically the treatment he had been subjected to and the indignity he had suffered. The Grand Duke simply shrugged his shoulders, and replied: "Those are bad times, and we must accommodate ourselves and submit to such inconveniences." A Grand Duke at the present moment can do no more than any other individual in Russia. We have a state of siege here, and what a state of siege the foregoing illustration sufficiently hullentes.—Cor. London Telegraph.

Beggars That Ride.

In San Antonio, a queer-looking old town in Texas, the streets are narrow, winding, unpaved, and lined with low, thick-walled stone houses, having earthen floors and flat roofs. On some of the roofs bright flowers and feathery grasses wave.

Along the narrow streets ride beggars mounted on shaggy little donkeys, and looking as all around for something to give them alms. These fellows are a great brawny Mexicans, with fiery black eyes which have a guilty look in them, and are very quick to catch sight of money. If you toss a coin to one of these beggars nothing less than a five-cent piece will do—he is sure to catch it in his hat, and from there it will be slipped into some pocket of his ragged clothes. Then he will grin, touch his replaced hat, and ride stately on.

His home, which probably is in the outskirts of the town, is called a "jacal," and is built with upright posts, rough boards, bits of cloth, and all sorts of materials, and thatched with straw. It contains but little furniture, yet shelters heaps of sweet-potatoes, garlic and red-peppers.—St. Nicholas for June.

The prospects for fruit along the Hudson River Valley are excellent, both for peaches and small fruits. The apple crop will be below the average of 1876 and 1878, this being the "off year" for that fruit.

How Gen. Dodge Made a Good Bargain in Mining Stocks.

Apropos of the rise in Mammoth, they tell a capital story about Gen. Dodge. Some time ago A. G. Brown, a celebrated operator here, bought one thousand shares of Mammoth from Gen. Dodge at three dollars a share. This was when the company was organized, about eight or nine months ago, and three dollars was bed-rock. The thing hung fire for a long time. The Sierra and Nevada excitement came along, and nobody gave Mammoth a second thought. It was not on the board; it had no value, and you couldn't really give it away. It went by the name of "Dodge's pup." Assessments were levied regularly. Brown talked long and loud, and the street resounded with his curses. He swore that Dodge had swindled him, and he was going to get even with that warrior some day, come weal, come woe.

The day before the news of the strike in Mammoth leaked out, Dodge, who was living very low in Oakland, sent a telegram over to Brown that he would like to see him at once. Brown had heard that the General was at the point of death, and a feeling of sympathy accompanied him on board the boat. He took the next boat. Arriving at the General's elegant house, he was shown up to the sick man's chamber. Nobody was there but Gen. Dodge and his secretary. The General lay propped up by pillows, looking the picture of ghastliness. He was very feeble, his breath came quick and short, his eyes were glittering, and his hands lay helpless beside him.

"I have sent for you, Mr. Brown," said the General, with much difficulty of speech, "to tell you that I shall be very ill; and—I fear; may not get over it. With a view to that contingency I—I have been arranging my business affairs there the General was overcome with weakness, and a number of five minutes ensued to enable him to recuperate. I am told—that you are not satisfied with the sale I made to you of that Man—moth. Now, I don't want you to—to—die worth a cent, feeling that I leave anybody behind who believes that I have—ever swindled him. I believed the stock was worth the money, and I believe so yet; but I do not want anybody now to think that I have got the best of them. I—I don't know what the stock is worth, or if it is worth anything—but if you like I will call our trade off. Give me your stock, and I will give your three thousand dollars back."

In very pity Mr. Brown would not prolong the conversation, but left the words for the present his sympathy for the General, and then with the remark that, though he did it with some reluctance, he would accept the offer.

"Antoine," gasped Gen. Dodge, faintly from the pillow to his secretary, "give Mr. Brown a check—and take his stock."

The next morning everybody knew that a big strike had been made in Mammoth, and before night ten dollars was freely bid for the stock. To-day fifty dollars—all that could be got—were bought for sixteen dollars a share. Gen. Dodge is slowly recovering, and on Monday was in his office.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

The Latest Arctic Discovery.

The name of Nordenskjold, the learned and daring Swede, is henceforth to be added to the list of successful explorers. He has completed a great undertaking, and as the same time has made a distinct and original contribution to the sum of human knowledge. Late in December, when within a few days' call of the end of his perilous voyage, he was blocked in the ice near Kellett Land, an island off the northeast coast of Siberia. Here he and his gallant company passed the winter, it is not yet known how. Many feared that they had met the fate of other explorers in the same region—cold, scurvy and preparations on a great scale were already making to rescue them if alive, or to find the fate of their bones. Others were more hopeful, and predicted that they would come safely to port as soon as the warmer currents swept along that stormy coast. Their confidence has been justified, and the news of the safe arrival of the Vega and its gallant crew at Behring's Straits has been received with satisfaction and relief throughout the civilized world.

Prof. Nordenskjold has been on many previous voyages of adventure and discovery. Seven years ago he was selected by the Government of Sweden to command a sledge expedition toward the Pole. He and his companions went further than any travelers had gone before, but the difficulties were too great for endurance, and the expedition was abandoned without practical result. Three years later, with the co-operation of a wealthy merchant of Gottenburg, who shared his enthusiasm, Prof. Nordenskjold sailed in command of another expedition along the coast, past Nova Zembla, to the great central rivers of Siberia emptying into the sea. It was the first time the inhabitants of that vast region realized the possibility of communication and traffic with Europe by way of the Arctic Ocean, and they hailed the Swedish stranger as a national benefactor. Mercantile ventures were successfully made over the new route the following year, and have doubtless continued to this time, for northern sailors are courageous and enterprising.

The success of these enterprises emboldened him to undertake a more daring adventure, and seek a passage to the Pacific Ocean through Behring's Straits. King Oscar, himself a sailor and an enlightened friend and patron of learning, encouraged the project with personal sympathy and liberal grants of money. The subject of his naval offices were contributed to the expedition, and representatives of the English and German Navies were invited to accompany them. Eminent men of science also contributed their services, and sailed with them. Mr. Dickson, the Gottenburg merchant who has enabled Prof. Nordenskjold to make his earlier voyages, opened his purse again, and with a gift equal to that of the Crown itself enabled the voyagers to sail with every possible device that could contribute to their comfort and safety. The Vega sailed on the 4th of July, 1878, and on the 3d of May, 1879, she was reported in the Straits, out of danger, all on board well, and about starting for home by way of the Suez Canal.

When they arrive at a sailing station, which may not be for several weeks, we shall have full particulars of this interesting voyage. Its successful accomplishment will give a fresh impulse to Arctic exploration, and stimulate anew the increasing interest in geographical science. It is the first gleam of success that has crowned the efforts of sailors in these Northern waters for many years, and it has been shown by it how much of the Arctic region of the world have failed. It has demonstrated the possibility of commerce with Siberia open seas easily navigated, and has opened a new route hitherto unknown. The value of the discovery is still to be shown, but it is certain that it opens many channels of trade not constructed in this way, and pews to be comfortable should conform to human anatomy—the seat should slope downward toward the back, making a fall of full three inches, while the back should incline away from a vertical at only four inches at the top, and this distance between the pews should never be less than three feet."

—The Christian at Work, speaking of Church union, says: "Yes, we all want to see it as accomplished fact. Then we shall be Presbyterians. Dr. Dix, a Presbyterian minister, has become pastor of a Congregationalist Church; Mr. Hall, a Congregationalist, has become pastor of a Reformed Church; Mr. Davis, a Methodist, assumes the pastorate of a Congregational Church. Other names could be added to the list, but these will suffice. And the inquiry comes, Why can't we have any destroyer as the Bible writers, no one of whom has changed his views, either of whom could return to the Jewish communion and, by mutilating himself—so that these denominational differences are boundary lines which can be crossed over at will. Why should the barriers be kept up? Do not Methodists and Presbyterians agree on the essentials of faith? Is not their doctrine of the ordinances?" Then why should there not be organic union?"

—The American Bible Union, which has gone into the hands of a Baptist, has no connection with the Bible Revision Committee, which is revising the King James jointly with the English divines. The American Bible Union claims to have used in the work of Bible retranslation. It was organized in 1850, after separating from the American Bible Society. Its first President was Dr. Spencer H. Cone. Its and Drs. Conant, Ellis, Kendrick, Hackett, Schaff, Lillie and many others at once began the revision of the Scriptures. They finished the New Testament twelve years ago, and have retranslated various books since. Its Hebrew Bible, Proverbs, Job and part of Isaiah, in the Old Testament. The Union collected by gift and by purchase an immense library, which cost it $30,000. The work of Bible revision goes on very slowly, the Union being crippled for want of money. It is said the rebellion killed it of much of its Southern support, and the English revisers have distracted the sense substitute may be supplied, that will take the place of this oeculent. The cultivation of Swedish turnips has been recommended, and long articles are written to show their nutritious value, easy culture and long-keeping qualities. We doubt if the American people will take kindly to rutabagas as food. They are nice in the spring. In a small way, on the table, as we would use flat turnips in the winter or beets in the summer, but as a steady diet the people of the United States will not take kindly to them. The introduction of Swedes in Scotland, and their cultivation in the last century, has been said to have saved that people from periodic starvation. The failure of the turnip crop, in the light of using them for human food, would not cause serious distress there now. The time has been when the continued failure of the potato crop in the United States would have created distress. That era has before the land was girdled by a railroad system, that great equalizer of values in a country, through swift and cheap transportation.

In the mastery of the problem of successfully cultivating potatoes in warm days, especially in the older sections of country, there are two prime questions to be considered. The first and most important one is the soil upon which they are planted, and the season for planting. While the potato is especially susceptible to frost, it is not a strong heart-loving plant like its relations, the tomato and egg-plant, or the sweet potato, which is no relation at all. On the contrary, the so-called Irish potato loves a moderately warm, as well as a humid temperature, and a cool, somewhat moist soil. Neither of these conditions are reached East, except measurably, and in the West they are only reached in isolated localities, except well north.

Our summers are hot and dry, and always have been measurably so. The summers East have been gradually losing their former sizable rainfall and temperature, from the gradual denudation of the forests. The same thing has happened in the West from opening up vast prairie regions to cultivation, and letting into the soil the full and direct influence of the sun; for the natural prairie grasses are conservers of moisture to a degree, just as a timber. On the great plains of the far West, where the vegetation on the buffalo range was short and rather sparse, the driving out of the wild beasts, allowed dense, tall, rank grasses to take their place, and the roots of these are pretty deep, say four inches, and till but little more than you would for corn. You may perhaps even have to resort to seed wheat to your neighbors. The potato beetle is but little feared nowadays. Paris-green, or better, the new poison, London purple, easily and cheaply gets away with the pests.

It is not that the potato is running out. The climate of the United States is not the best adapted, East or West, to the potato. Since varieties degenerate, so that none unless in exceptional cases, from twenty to twenty-five years may be set down as the average life of a variety. It is of especial value also that seed be obtained from time to time, and from well-known localities that would have been grown where the crop retains much of its normal vigor. In these days of keen competition, the farmer who succeeds must exercise his brains, and use his hands. It is not mere manual labor that makes the successful farmer. Here and there an individual may be successful with special crops. The rank and file, the great mass of farmers, get a competence through diversified crops. Among these there is much to be learned by observation and a careful study of local peculiarities as to soil, etc. The potato is necessary to the comfort of every family, and all who own or rent a piece of land should produce enough for family use. It may be easily done by carefully studying and reflecting upon what is written above.—Prairie Farmer.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—The Nature, Macmillan & Co., London, says this counter the following compliment: "It will be difficult to find a parallel to the case of seven English men in the illustrated scientific works which they have begun to publish in so short a time. And there is a good deal more implied than expressed in this candid acknowledgment of the effort made by authors and publishers to supply their readers with useful and interesting scientific information.

—M. Bert, of the Biological Society of Paris, has made some curious experiments results from his experiments on the temperature of the brain. When body and mind are in a state of absolute inaction, the temperature of the brain is the same. When any brain-work is undertaken, if the equilibrium is maintained in the side always shows the higher temperature. Raymond says that in cases of paralysis the temperature of the paralyzed hemisphere is higher than the parietal region than over the rest of the cranium, and here again the left side is hotter than the right by 0.3 to 0.4 deg. C.

—It is stated by the English journals that the Egyptian Government has entered competition has ordered Bessemer steel largely into use in the cutlery manufacture. It is generally acknowledged that the quality of the products thus obtained is not such as to enhance the world-wide fame of Sheffield wares. It appears at most to suit sailors and soldiers are employed for this purpose, and the increased consumption has induced several makers to offer special qualities of Bessemer steel, running them in small ingots—the same sizes in fact as the best—and grinding them to suit all customers. Thus, scissors' steels, which have been rated at the value of some $200 a ton, have come down to the $70 level. The 870 now in use German composition, it is said, has been a powerful factor in inducing the use of low-class material.

—Observations of snow collected on mountain-tops and within the arctic circle, far beyond the influence of factories and smoke, confirm the supposition that minute particles of iron float in the atmosphere, and in time fall to the earth. Some physicists believe that these floating particles of iron are concerned in the striking phenomena of the aurora. Grossman, of Guttingen, holds that streams of the varicles revolve round the sun, and that when pass ing the earth they are attracted to the poles, and then whirled forth as long filaments into space. But as they travel with planetary velocity they become ignited in our atmosphere, and thus produce the luminous appearance of the aurora. In his recent voyages Prof. Nordenskjold examined the snow in the north beyond Spitsbergen, and found therein exceedingly small particles of metallic iron, phosphorus and cobalt.—Electric Magazine.

—A correspondent of the London Builder contends that "the health of stable-keepers, of sewer-explorers, the exemption as the inmates of the ghetto during the cholera in Rome, proves, in his opinion, that the cause of epidemics lies much in the putrescent of human life than in diseased and unhealthful put together, and attributes a great deal of them among the wealthier classes to their overeating and drinking, just as, on the other hand, much of that among the poor is the fruit of privation. "People of means live to the top' every day, consequently there is no reserve force, for this has been all consumed in order according to surmount the weight of difficulties daily presented." London men servants have four and sometimes five meals (three of meat) daily, and the hospital doctors say that their blood is so heated by high living that they are very difficult patients to deal with."

The penalty of lying in Siam is to have the mouth sewed up.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The Methodist Book Concern no longer pays the salaries of the Bishops. The churches stand a special assessment for the purpose.

—Twenty-three of the twenty-nine members of the senior class of the Alleghany Theological Seminary have offered themselves as missionaries, some for fields in this country, and some to go among the heathen of far-off lands.

—The Australians have sent invitations to Bishop Gregg, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, to visit them and institute a propaganda, representing that the antipodes there are "thousands of members of the English Church who would be glad to join a Church of England purged of many things to which they object," and that reinforcements of Presbyterians and Congregationalists might be expected.

—Philadelphia, for its population of 800,000, has 564 churches and mission stations. Of these 98 are Methodist, 84 Episcopalian, 81 Presbyterian, 67 Baptist, 44 Roman Catholic and 56 Lutheran. The Friends have 15 houses, 7 belonging to the Orthodox branch and 8 to the Hicksite. The Jews have 4 synagogues. There are 20 churches belonging to the Reformed denominations, 11 to the German and 4 to the Dutch Reformed.

—The discomfort of church pews is commented upon by a religious newspaper as follows: "Unyielding pews and chairs, why is it that modern invention fails to furnish seats for a comfortable pew or chair? The bench of the ordinary church pew is fourteen inches wide, whereas it should be eighteen inches; then it is placed on a straight back, perpendicular to the floor, when the plant row; now set another row along the opposite edge of the board. So continue until the bed is completed. The advantages are: No hoeing; runners cannot catch between the rows; berries always clean from dirt. The soil under the boards gathering food to feed the plants; the roots always keep moist, etc. When you desire to renew the bed, instead of spading it up, after a crop has been harvested, remove the boards and allow the vines to run over the paths formerly occupied by the boards, and the next spring replace the boards by putting them directly on the row of old vines in the space between as in first setting, and you will have an annual crop with but little trouble.—*Cor. —There are so many fluids and powders for the destruction of insects as there are varieties of insects to be destroyed. The early application of kerosene emulsion is more efficacious than a barrel full of the most deadly decoction after the bugs, flies or beetles get the opportunity to take possession of a bush or plant. Whale oil soap, put too strong, is as much of a destroyer of life in this country. In England paraffine is coming into use. One wine-glassful to four gallons of soft water, applied with a syringe, will destroy all kinds of insect life. Dissolution, the life side always shows the higher temperature. AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Sheep, owing to their shyness, should be treated with great kindness. Their treatment should be such that they will actually learn to entertain an affection for their keepers.

—Cling to the farm, make much of it, put yourself into it, bestow your heart and your brain upon it, so that it shall savor of you and radiate your virtue after your day's work is done.—Iowa State Register.

—Feathers should be very thoroughly dried before using them. If feather beds smell badly, or become heavy, from want of proper renovation of the feathers, or from old age, empty them and wash the feathers thoroughly in a tub of suds, spread them in the garret to dry, and they will be as light and good as new. Never lay the pillows or feather ticks to dry in the sun; lay them in a shady place, where the wind can purify them. Heat makes feathers rancid.

—Pot plants that become unthrifty and sickly may be revived by planting them in rich soil in a sunny spot, after trimming, after the season become permanently warm. This they will often grow into a vigorous growth (July and August), and be ready for repotting. Oleanders, oranges, lemons, camellias, and in fact most all pot plants, may be made healthy in this way. They must, however, be protected from the effects of escaping prairie winds.—Prairie Farmer.

—A good and easy way to manage a bed of strawberries for family use: Lay a board, say two inches wide, with the edge of your bed, and set the plants along by the edge of the board; then put down another board so that its edge will be inclose from the plant row; now set another row along the opposite edge of the board. So continue until the bed is completed. Potatoes Running Out.

Since the advent of the potato disease, followed by the introduction of the Colorado potato beetle, the question of a prolific potato has constantly confronted more than any other article of daily use. Every few years, from a more or less extended failure in the crop over widely extended areas, prices go up largely during certain seasons of the year. This was especially the case all last winter and spring, East and West. So often has this occurred, that journals East are gravely consoling how some substitute may be supplied, that will take the place of this oeculent. The cultivation of Swedish turnips has been recommended, and long articles are written to show their nutritious value, easy culture and long-keeping qualities. We doubt if the American people will take kindly to rutabagas as food. They are nice in the spring. In a small way, on the table, as we would use flat turnips in the winter or beets in the summer, but as a steady diet the people of the United States will not take kindly to them. The introduction of Swedes in Scotland, and their cultivation in the last century, has been said to have saved that people from periodic starvation. The failure of the turnip crop, in the light of using them for human food, would not cause serious distress there now. The time has been when the continued failure of the potato crop in the United States would have created distress. That era has before the land was girdled by a railroad system, that great equalizer of values in a country, through swift and cheap transportation.

In the mastery of the problem of successfully cultivating potatoes in warm days, especially in the older sections of country, there are two prime questions to be considered. The first and most important one is the soil upon which they are planted, and the season for planting. While the potato is especially susceptible to frost, it is not a strong heart-loving plant like its relations, the tomato and egg-plant, or the sweet potato, which is no relation at all. On the contrary, the so-called Irish potato loves a moderately warm, as well as a humid temperature, and a cool, somewhat moist soil. Neither of these conditions are reached East, except measurably, and in the West they are only reached in isolated localities, except well north.

A DOCTOR'S man has a route that never blisters, can not be induced by all the arts of blind-fest tickling to kick; a small boy can sit with his back against this mule's legs and never get the life of a kick; a dog can bark at him for seven hours, and he won't kick; in short, there is no kick in him. P. S.—This paragraph is a faint attempt to introduce a new kind of mule. N. B.—The mule we speak of is dead.—New Haven Register.

Look To Your Lamps.

A white wick tube in a burner is better than a narrow one, as the wider the wick used, if it works freely in the wick tube, the greater the amount of capillary force and the larger the quantity of oil that will be pumped up by the wick to feed the flame.

Wicks should be selected that are closely woven, and should fit closely and work freely in the wick tube. Compression of the wick prevents a free flow of the oil.

A wick made of common candle wicking inclosed in a muslin casing is the best that can be used; and such wicks can be made by any one skilled in the use of the needle. The fibers of the cotton must be laid smoothly and inclosed in the muslin casing so that the width and thickness of the wick will be the same as the wick tube in the lamp, care being taken to avoid any knots or unevenness that would prevent the wick from being easily raised or lowered.

A proper supply of air must be furnished the flame or the combustion is imperfect, hence the necessity of keeping the disc (or perforated plate in which the chimney usually rests) free from dirt and lint. If charred wick tubes are apt to fall on it, and which, if permitted to remain, clog the holes in the plate and prevent the free flow of air absolutely required to supply the flame and insure good light. To remove the dirt and charred wick from the plate, use a hard brush.

Careless or improper trimming is often the cause of poor light. The charred portion of the wick should always be removed before lighting the lamp, so that there may be a free flow of air all around the flame to the top of the wick tube. If the end of the wick is become crusted or hardened it also should be trimmed off with a pair of sharp scissors, as the oil cannot flow through the crust formed by a continuous use of an untrimmed wick.

Lamps should be emptied at least once a week, the oil turned back into the can, and the lamp well washed out with hot soap-suds.

In lighting the lamp, turn the wick up slightly at first, until it gets well started and the oil flows freely to the flame, and then turn up to the desired height. If the flame drops to any considerable extent after the wick is turned down, make a change in the wick.—Kansas Farmer.

Marriage Among the Australians.

In Australia, as elsewhere, a tie of blood unites parents and acknowledged validity binds men to their partners. Marriage, again, is surrounded, as among civilized people, by laws of "forbidden degrees," which are very curious, very little understood, and which in many ways resemble, while they differ from, those of the Jews. In the laws of other undeveloped peoples. Wives are chiefly taken by exchange. A father, a group—by a group—by another, eldest brother or uncle—has the customary right of swapping away the younger women of the group in exchange for other young women whom it is lawful for him to marry. It is often the old men by wife families have the best chance of getting more wives, while young men with no sisters are likely to remain bachelors. If this system worked itself out, each tribe would consist of a few overgrown harems and a set of wild bachelors. As it happens, young men and women revolt against the old, and voluntary elopements or marriages by capture are common. The nurses of true love runs anything but smooth. The lover is supposed to the "ordeal of spears," which are hurled at him by the relatives of the lady. The runaway bride is beaten, perhaps her fact are exacted to prevent her from running away again. If a young pair are courageous and true to each other, however, the sympathy of the group usually comes round to them, and they enter on peaceful married life. It has been said that the old men sometimes give wives to the young, who thus "take stock," as the ancient Irish said, and become, in a way, the vassals of the old fellows. Society in Australia is not sufficiently advanced for it; but, according to some authorities a very Australian state of things prevails in rural Russia.—Saturday Review.

At St. Luke's Hospital, Friday evening, an operation was performed, in the presence of several surgeons and interested witnesses, upon William Boeckler, a young man who has been sick for a week with severe hemorrhages, which gives every promise of saving his life and effecting his complete restoration of health. The patient had been suffering with daily hemorrhages, which reduced him from a strong and vigorous man in less than a week to so emaciated a condition that unless something was promptly done his death would have resulted in a few hours at the farthest. He was so weak that the usual remedies utterly failed to stop the bleeding caused by quinsy. Dr. Dedolph, who was in attendance, after the failure of all other attempts to save his patient, decided to attempt the transfusion of blood into Boeckler's system, taken from a sheep. Friday evening, Drs. Dedolph, Stone Stanis and McDonald met at St. Luke's Hospital and performed the experiment. The sick man looked like wax, and he was so weak as to be hardly conscious. A live sheep was brought in, and, when all was ready, a tube was inserted into the carotid artery in the animal's neck, and then into a prominent vein in the sick man's right arm. The blood spurted through the inclosure, and was permitted to continue till Boeckler commenced to breathe short and fast. Then the tube was removed. All the while the patient's condition was carefully watched, and it is estimated that about six ounces of the blood of the sheep passed into his arm. Six hours after consumed to revive, and last evening, at a late hour, was feeling much better. The physicians seem reason why he should not completely recover. The operation is unusual, but is not regarded as a remarkably delicate one. It is the first of the kind performed in the State, and probably the first west of Chicago, as far as any record is to be found.—St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer-Press.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 13, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL:

In the cities of the American eagle's dominion the Alderman has come to be regarded as a mighty and high potentate who is practically as superior to law as he is to the decencies of honesty or even moderation. Judge Gilbert of Brooklyn, does not seem to concur in this general impression. Having shaken off the incubus long exacted to feed the members of his court in regard to calling an election. They never so much as thought of taking any notice of the order, and indeed, perhaps considered it as something of an insult to their greatness. Judge Gilbert fined their indignant astonishment when they were summarily arrested and hustled into court, where, not being able to give a legally satisfactory explanation of their course they were each allowed the alternative of paying $150 fine or spending thirty days in the common jail. There was a great deal of wrathful sputtering under this unexpected blow, but the Aldermen found that the judgement exactly must be paid, and at last accounts were actively pressing the Court of Appeals for a release from the penalties imposed. It is to be hoped the latter court will uphold Judge Gilbert. Aldermen in general and the Brooklyn and New York Aldermen in particular, sadly need such a lesson.

Notwithstanding the fact that in this age of travel, great people from abroad are no longer a rarity in this republic, quite a flutter of interest was excited by the arrival here of the Duke of Argyle, en route for Canada to visit his distinguished son, the Marquis of Lorne. Apart from his world wide literary reputation, the Duke is a blueblood among the blueblooded, his rank and ancestry running back into the dark ages, and his titles of nobility numbering nearly twenty. Beside all this, the Queen of England ant Empress of India is his son's mother in law, and his wealth is enormous. One would hardly suspect so much greatness to lurk in the small framed man with gray red hair and whiskers, high cheeked bones and thoroughly Scotch aspect who was met by a crowd of the curious as he drove Larked from the Scythia last week. His stay in New York was limited to one day and he is now enjoying the hospitality of the Governor General of Canada and his royal wife.

It will be remembered that I devoted a letter, a couple of months ago, to the great Woodruff scientific expedition which was to have started from this port last month. The failure to secure sufficient members to cover the vast expenses of the undertaking prevented its execution as proposed, and this week its energetic projector and head, Mr. James O. Woodruff, died in this city from acute brain disease, induced by overwork in connection with his favorite scheme. Mr. Woodruff was a remarkable embodiment of courage and persistence. He seemed to know no such word as discouragement, and after the failure of this attempt, in which he had put a great deal of money, he at once set about organizing a new expedition, similar in principle, but better guarded to insure against contingencies. There is a good prospect of success for this latter scheme, under the management of Mr. Arthur B. Read, who was Mr. Woodruff's able associate in the former enterprise, and who survives to carry into effect the useful and magnificent plan to which Mr. Woodruff gave his life.

In speaking of May 30th, the Sun aptly remarks that Decoration Day street parades have been chief, remarkable, of late years, for the advertising wagons that, under guise of doing homage to the dead, announce to the living the virtues, cheapness or place of purchase of various wares. It does not add to the solemnity of such a procession to see it largely consisting of drays, swathed in white cotton bands, bearing in big letters such inscriptions as "Honor to Our Heroes. Buy Black's Soap Works Shad Bars for [illegible]" —It was Swept the Brave? Come out with Liberty and Cure!" A committee was appointed this year to equitably encourage advertisers, but they, nevertheless, formed a disagreeable prominent feature of the street show. This recalls the report of a recent experience of Lawrence Barrett, who, while playing Hamlet in San Francisco, is said to have been offered $100 a night by a wide awake clothing dealer if in a wonderful speaking the words "Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer by this sun of York," add "the Read Smith sells for $24." Unfortunately for the wideawake tradesman, Lawrence was proof against the dazzling allurements of his proposition.

Coaching as a pastime is an exotic in America, but it seems to have taken a pretty firm hold and bids fair to become something of a national sensation. It was generally supposed that the fever would be a short one, and that last year would witness its peaceful decease; but the Coaching Club's first parade of the present season, which took place on Thursday last, gave proof that quite the contrary is the case. On that day, eleven elegant drags formed in line at Madison square, and with four in hand and liveried horses in front of each, and the tops filled with gaily dressed members of the club, and daintily attired belles, the parade presented a brilliant picture. Probably $60,000 would be a low valuation of the participating teams.

Any attempt to chronicle even the more serious of the ordinary crimes in New York would exclude every other topic from my letter and would become pretty tedious reading. I must mention, however, two cases that have been disposed of this week, which are noteworthy, both from their similarity, and their terrible nature. A woman disappointed in love was the criminal in each case, and the instrument of revenge in either was a bowl of oil of vitriol thrown by the "woman scorned" into the face of the unsuspecting victim. Both men were terribly burned and disfigured for life, and each lost the sight of an eye. Both women were promptly tried and convicted. One was sentenced to five years and the other to one year in the penitentiary, which result will, it is hoped, prevent the recurrence of this hideous offence.

After eight months of unusually assiduous, skillful and costly detective work, the perpetrators of the great Manhattan Bank burglary, in which nearly three millions of dollars in cash and bonds were taken, have been discovered, and a part of them taken into custody. It turns out that a watchman in the employ of the bank was induced to co-operate with three or four of the most noted bank robbers in the country to make the haul, and that they had to wait nearly two years for the favorable opportunity which they embraced. The action of the government in issuing duplicates of the stolen bonds rendered the booty of little value, the amount of cash found being very small. RADIX.

Politic and Impolitic.

Senator Hamlin has come out in favor of Grant, dropping Blaine.

Massachusetts papers say that Gen. Butler is going to put aside all branch organizations and capture the Democratic nomination itself this fall.

The New York Herald immigrants have decided that the country is safe from Cæsarism, and the country—may the whole world breathe again.

The Memphis Appeal wants us to chip in for a monument to the memory of Fort Pillow Forrest, who "set the beautiful example of patient submission to the inevitable!"

"Let us now be up and Eating," is the boisterous refrain of the Slim De moc say, to which, in view of the future, they add, sotto voce, the next line of the poem, "With a heart for any fate."

Tilden declines to deliver the North Carolina Trinity College address as it is impossible for him to go south at this time. Wonderful coincidence! Tilden can't go the south, and the south can't go Tilden.

The Republican committee of California has issued an address calling for thorough organization in the state, and promising, if relied upon to administer the new constitution, to do so with a faithful interpretation of that instrument.

Southern Democratic Sentiment.

From the Phœnix, Mississippi, Southern Star, June 4.

Whenever a Yankee Congressman lays it upon his shoulder we want to see a Southern brigadier spring forward and yank it as high as the Capitol. There will be a lockdown on the part of the bullies when this little performance has been repeated a few times. They must be taught their old fear and respect for their southern superiors.

They thereby committed treason. He is a glorious error that is known to the laws of the land and men.

At least 500,000 of your black legs in blue were shot down to the death in 1861-5.

Perhaps you feel like sparing another half million to your arrant thieves and cut throats.

How is it?

You are rank and treasonable[illegible] in the sublime, terrific, universal quiet is wrong from your ranks.

That is as it is the price you are paying for the invasion of your sacred soil.

Do you think that you can stand a debt of $2,500,000,000 on top of your present half billion?

How is it?

O, make your threats! Ink since we have transplanted the reins of our state government we have been whooping along toward prosperity and power at a lively gallop.

We can stand another fight if you can—glory to God!

If the bloody shirters should recover their power and resume their tyrannical and traitorous hostility toward the south it would be well for the general government to steer clear of a foreign war.

As silvers thrive the adversities and our sections would most positively take place under these circumstances.

For every drop of southern blood that was spilled by your Lincoln murderers we will have revenge.

For every southern tear free that was shed by your Lincoln miscellaneous we will have revenge.

For every southern dollar that was stolenly your Lincoln thieves we will have revenge.

For every insult and outrage that we suffered at the hands of your Lincoln and sola we will have revenge.

Do you think ye bastard Democrats of Yankeedom, that we have one tithe of the love and veneration for the Union That we had for the old Confederacy?

Do you think that we feel one tithe of the deep devotion for the star spangled Banner that we felt for the Stars and Bars?

The perpetuity of the union, as far as it is concerned, depends upon the supremacy of our sentiments.

The triumph of states rights and state supremacy may possibly lead to the secession of Yankeedom, but the triumph of Centralism and negro domination will positively lead to the destruction of the confederacy of states.

Our people will never acknowledge that the federal government is a nation, and they will march with fire and through gore and fire before they will again bow to the rule of the wretched blacks.

The New York Tribune, speaking of the memorial observances of Decoration Day, in that city, and in all parts of the country, remarks that it "was an excellent day for making a note of the wide difference between forgetting and forgiving," and adds:

"We may not be savages, but we have not hidden often to cherish some sort of common prudence. We cherish only kindly feelings toward the South, but we do not care to commit the ship of State to lands which not long ago naught to wreck it. We propose to call treason treason, and disloyalty disloyalty. We think of rebellion as we do of night of confederates. Time has not turned the falsehood into truth, nor political sinfulness into patriotism. When we are ready for that, we shall cease to keep Decoration Day.

"Brave men who fought for us! we have not forgotten why and for what you fought. The flowers which were reverently carried to honored sepulchers may fade, but justice shall smell sweet, and the liberty of all men within our borders be kept fresh and fragrant. The blood of heroes has not been shed in vain."

Fifty Lies.

What a truly to omitted world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up in sheer disgust, discouraged and worried out with disease. When there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE mystery attending the robbery of the Manhattan Savings Bank, of New York, last October, was dissolved by one arrest, on the night of the 31st ult., of John Slevin, the night watchman. After a days confinement he was induced to signal and reveal the names of his confederates, and shortly after, John Hobbs and Johnny Hope, two well-known burglars, were gathered in. The watchman says the job had been in course of preparation for over three years. It seems the burglars entered the building by means of false keys, which they had caused to be made from wax impressions secured by the roguish watchman. The vault, it is said, they opened the combination from the janitor, and plundered the vaults, as has been heretofore published.

AT New Boston, near Woburn, Mass., on the night of the 2d, the works of the Merrimac Chemical Company were totally destroyed by fire, involving a loss of from $70,000 to $100,000. Weeks, the company's bookkeeper, was burned fatalely from his caine.

ON the 4th, at Robinsville, Md., L. S. Miller, a lad of fifteen, shot and killed Charles Norris, about the same age. It seems that Miller had been teased by the boys and called nicknames. He procured a gun, loaded it, followed his teasers and fired into the crowd. Norris was hit, and died instantly.

THE next session of the German Catholic Convention will be held in Buffalo.

ON the 5th, Poet & Co's manufactory of railroad supplies and electrical apparatus in Cincinnati was destroyed by fire, involving a loss of over $100,000. During the afternoon, while a number of workmen were overlooking the ruins, the roof near the center fell in, and a section of the fire faces, twenty-two by thirty feet, was carried into the cellar. About a dozen men were at work under the falling mass, and were borne to the basement below. Of these five were killed outright, and all the rest were more or less seriously injured.

The thieves secured about $10,000.

It is also provided that no portion of the money appropriated in this act shall be used as compensation or to defray the expenses of any person employed under the statute authorizing the appointment of Supervisors and Deputy Marshals of Elections, and that no officer of the Government shall make any contracts or incur any liability before a sufficient sum to meet such contract or liability shall have been appropriated by Congress.

Rice for Lieutenant-Governor, Anthony Howells for Treasurer, Isaac Pennington for Auditor, W. J. Gilmore for Judge of Supreme Court, Isaac Pillars for Attorney-General, and Theodore Othaers for Member of Board of Public Works. The resolutions adopted demand free and fair elections, and to that end denounce all interference with elections by the military power; declare that the Election laws of Congress interfere with State elections, unnecessarily and dangerously increase the presence of regulating the manner of Congressional elections, and that the same are unconstitutional, and ought to be repealed; denounce the Republican minority in Congress for refusing to vote supplies for the maintenance of the Government unless the majority would agree to the use of troops at the polls, etc., and condemn the President for his unprecedented use of the veto power, in order to perpetuate the objectionable laws aforesaid; declare that not a dollar shall be appropriated by Congress to pay soldiers, Marshals, Deputy-Marshals, or Supervisors of Elections, to interfere with or control elections; reaffirm the financial principles heretofore advocated by the Democratic party of Ohio; etc., etc.

THE MANHATTAN BANK ROBBERY.

How the Manhattan Bank Was Robbed of Nearly $3,000,000—Full Confession by One of the Perpetrators.

NEW YORK, June 1.

The whole story of the Manhattan Savings Bank robbery was told last night through the confession of one of the burglars. Expectancy night Capt. Byrnes and his detectives arrested Henry Glenn, Patrick Slevin and William Kelly, on a charge of being implicated in the robbery, whereby $2,000,000 were stolen on the night of the 27th of October, 1878. One of them has confessed the whole plot to Capt. Byrnes. A burglar known as Little Tracey first concocted the scheme, and organized a band to rob the bank. It was broken up, however, by the arrest and conviction of most of the members of the gang for other crimes. Then he organized a second gang, in which were Jimmy Hope, George Howard, John Dobbs, Jim Brady and others. They also had in league with them a man employed as watchman at odd hours in the bank. Two attempts were made by this gang to rob the bank, but once failed through the inability of the watchman to meet his engagements. This gang also broke up. But Hope, thoroughly convinced of the feasibility of his scheme, lost no time in reorganizing his forces. Dobbs ("big Kid"), who was "on foot" again, and others equally skilled and desperate, joined him, and work began in earnest. On Sunday morning, when the friendly watchman was on duty in the bank, Hope was let into the building, and used his opportunity to thoroughly examine the vaults. The next Sunday he returned, and spilled her out, and she refused to scream; but the latter resisted, and a fierce fighting with Saunders, and getting worsted, how she arrived upon the scene with a stone between her two arms that would have been Saunders' death if it had happened to him: in fact, he remembered no time when she was not a part of himself, when he was not sat with his arm about her waist, when he had not kissed her at meeting and parting, when he had not left every other girl for her, and would have been amazed if she had not welcomed him as a matter of course. After he went away to the Naval Academy, Emily's letters were something like a tonic, and forward to twice a week as unfailingly as to Wednesdays and Saturdays themselves; and when he made his flying visit home, it was to Emily that he went with the first flush of his new joy and angers and joys. "Emily," he said once, in a startled way, "I believe I say my prayers to you."

Being a man of mind about sweet Emily Travers, you can imagine his wretched consternation when, on returning home from his first cruise, having been for some time without letters, and coming in by the long window instead of the door, he saw a fellow leaning over her chair—a tall, dark, handsome man, handsome but for a scar across his forehead—leaning over her chair and holding her hand, while he backward and upward gaze was as brightly fond as his manner was assured. For a moment Norman stood spell-bound, and, as he stood, he heard Emily saying:

"Oh, how can you ask me, Howard, dear? You know we never, never can be parted."

To think was something to which Mr. Norman Macpherson never committed. He rather excelled in feeling. And just now he felt as if the only thing in the world that he was to know this varied down, accordingly, he took one step and did it. And then, seizing Emily's hand himself, only to throw it from him with a swift and angry outcry at her perfidy, he was gone; and he never fairly knew again where he was, or what had happened, till he found himself on blue water for a three-years's cruise, with plenty of time to eat his heart out, and profoundly convinced that he was a victim of the blackest treachery, and that, if Emily were false, then all the world was false. Six months of that bitter diet, with the swift, mad scene before his eyes, changing only to show the man falling, Sophy running forward with a shriek, and Emily standing frozen to stone as she had started from her chair, and the open-hearted and gay youth had become a taciturn and gloomy man, without a word to spare, ready for any dangerous service, and never half so pleased as when some black tempest followed them, and the thick darkness shut them in like the curtain of death and judgment that they were just about to be sure he had it.

Yet when a twelvemonth had passed, his bitterness began to be something less in anger; occasionally a ray of sense would break upon his gloom, and the thought would come to him that, after all, he had never once spoken of marriage to Emily Travers in so many words; he had taken every thing for granted; he had left the way open for any other beggar that chose to come along. Why, he asked, had he ever doubted Emily? She loved him to-day like a brother, as she had always done. Loved him like a brother! Not she, he would reply to himself, when he had felted her over the ground, and had flung her from him like a snake. She had reason to hate him, he said of course, and hate him she did.

Life looked dark enough to Norman Macpherson at that time, and you may be sure he made no effort to set things right. With the persistency of the Scottish race, he fitted his back to bear the burden; and when the three years' cruise was over, he made no visit to Greenhorne at all, but got another term of sea service, much to the relief of some one else who wished to stay ashore.

As for Emily, she had not been gone out night that she was not beside herself. Talking to the young naval officer who was going to marry Sophy—a seeing she had kept at Sophy's requirement, and concerning which she had often drawn on her fancy for Norman's pious ire and surprise when she should be allowed to tell him—addressing him affectionately, as she felt toward one so much like her brother, and answering his threat of taking Sophy away by begging him not to part her from her sister, suddenly a white maniac with blazing eyes had appeared in the window, an uplifted arm had fallen, the shrieking Sophy had run to lift the head of her supposed lover, and he was gone. What it all meant she could not conjecture, and she was too stunned to make the effort. Ever since then, as if she were a moving statue; every thing seemed to go on a long, long way between her and herself, and she was only aware that she did not come; and when day after day and week after week crept by, and no explanation came from Norman, and she knew nothing of his whereabouts, except the official statements, she realized that her world had collapsed with a wicked bubble, and she collapsed with it.

When Emily came up from that sickness it was like one emerging from the valley of the shadow of death, and some of the shadow still clung to her; you suppose all the world wanted to marry your Emily, you conceited monkey? Sophy was a girl much more to my mind, let me tell you. Sophy has been my wife this many a month. Abel it was of Sophy that Emily was speaking when you took the law into your hands. I suppose, sir," ran on the stranger, "that I ought to give you a good thrashing; but all the satisfaction I want is to hear you say that you are ashamed of yourself." And you may be sure he had it.

But there was no time for conversation before they were joined by others, and the courtesies of the exceedingly brief occasion occupied the time of hosts and guests till the boat put off again and the Attaseek received her own. But a letter to the Department, requesting a leave of absence from his ship, went into the mail from the next harbor they entered, and the time that passed before ans—er came and the request was granted was longer than all the rest of Norman Macpherson's life. And although he traveled homeward as fast as steam could carry him, to his friend's house in Greenhorne, and there found himself in the offing—and wondering only if he would find the anchors weighing with the gale. The wind was straight in his face, and the rain came fine as needles; he held the umbrella, as he bent to the force of the gale, directly before him, like an African warrior's shield; and that is the reason that suddenly he found himself brought to a stand-still, and with a sudden shock his umbrella had interlocked with another, like two horned creatures doing battle. "A thousand pardons," he exclaimed gruffly, in English, before he bethought himself of his French. "Do pray excuse me," came a parcel of silver notes, in English, too. And then, in another moment, both of the umbrellas were sailing off upon the blast and careering out to sea—but what cared they who saw them in that gathering gloom, as Emily and he were clasped in one another's arms, and life was whole again?

They were married the next day; and although, a year afterward, Norman left the navy and entered business, it was not till that morose man had earned the reputation of being the jolliest dog afloat. —Harper's Bazar.

His Peculiar Position.

The sight of a strong, healthy man loading on Clifford street yesterday with a snow-shovel on his shoulder was sufficient to attract the attention of every one who passed him, and to the inquiry as to whether he was searching for a job of shoveling snow he replied:

"I am, sir, but I haven't any luck in striking work. It is pretty late for snow, I suppose?"

"Well, you can't look for more than a foot of snow after the middle of May, even in this country," said the other.

"No, I suppose not. If we only had five or six inches I could make three or four dollars and get along somehow. As it is, I am placed in a very peculiar position."

"How?"

"Why, all the ready capital I have is locked up in this thirty-five cent snow-shovel, and no snow to work on. If I had my money in a lawn-mower or house-plants or garden-seeds I might realize some profit, but now I don't know what I shall do."

"You are not to blame if it doesn't snow. You don't run the weather."

"That's true," slowly replied the man, "but my position is peculiar, just the same. People won't give me credit for my honest intentions. I need work —I'm just hungry for work, but you wait and see how folks use me."

He knocked at the door of a private house, and a woman appeared.

"Do you want the snow shoveled off your walk this morning?" politely inquired the stranger, as he held up his shovel.

"No, sir!" was her emphatic response.

"I'll do it very cheap, madam."

"No matter, you can't have the job!" she snapped.

"You see how it is," observed the man, as he returned to the walk and leaned against a shade-tree with leaves as big as his hand. "My capital is locked up in this shovel, and no prospects of snow for six months. Considering all circumstances, would you like to advance me ten cents until December?"

The citizen thought he would. There was something about the circumstance worth five times that money.—Detroit Free Press.

Gen. Shields.

Gen. James Shields, the old veteran of two wars, died suddenly at Ottumwa, Iowa, on Sunday evening last, where he had been visiting relatives and engaged in the duties of his lecture course. The news of his death will carry sadness with it through out the entire country, while, but few regard the brave old soldier with feelings of kindly admiration and respect. Gen. Shields was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1810, and emigrated to the United States in 1827, settling in Illinois about the year 1830. Prior to the outbreak of the Mexican War he held several offices, although he was not naturalized until 1840. In 1843 he was sent to the Legislature from Randolph County, subsequently was appointed Auditor by Gov. Carlin, and in 1845 was elected a Supreme Judge. He was next appointed Commissioner of the General Land-Office by President Polk, and, when the Mexican War broke out, by favor of the President he entered the service as a Brigadier-General, and made for himself a record of soldierly skill and courage that has rarely been surpassed by any American soldier. At Cerro Gordo he was shot through and through and reported as killed, but he recovered in time to take a distinguished part in the assault on the city of Mexico. Gen. Scott, and was the recipient of a sword from the State of South Carolina. On his return to Illinois, in 1849, he was elected to the United States Senate, but, only having been naturalized in 1840, the time required to make him eligible had not expired, and his seat was declared vacant. As soon as he became eligible, however, he was again elected, and served until his term expired. He subsequently made Minnesota his home, was in 1857 was elected to the Senate from that State, and served two years. During the War of the Rebellion he was given a commission in the Union Army, and served with great gallantry in the Department of West Virginia until he was again severely wounded. Meanwhile his old wounds broke out afresh. He became deaf and almost lost his eyesight. The combination of physical ailments compelled him to resign. After the war he moved to Missouri, where has since been his home. With the events of his life during the past few years—his election to fill the brief remainder of Senator Bogy's term in the Senate, and his brilliant success as a lecturer—the public is already familiar.

In his death the country loses one of the most gallant and brilliant soldiers on her rolls; an officer who will always be held in grateful remembrance for his distinguished public service; a gentleman of the highest dignity and most spotless character; a scholar of excellent culture; and a man of those genial and humane characteristics which appealed not only to his own countrymen but to the whole public.—Chicago Tribune, June 3.

A METHOD of producing from oak an imitation ebony, of great beauty, is thus described in the Revue Industrielle: The wood is immersed for forty-eight hours in a hot saturated solution of alum, and then brushed over with a logwood decoction. To this end, one part of best logwood is boiled in ten parts of water, filtered through linen, and evaporated at a gentle heat until the volume is reduced one half; to every quart of this are added ten to fifteen drops of a saturated solution, neutral, of indigo. After applying this dye to the wood, the latter is rubbed with a saturated solution, filtered, of verdigris, in hot concentrated acetic acid, the operation being repeated until a black of the desired intensity is obtained. Oak treated according to this method, it is said, presents a very close as well as attractive resemblance to genuine ebony.

Fourth in Charlevoix.

The 4th of all glad times, when Americans are supposed to cast aside all distinctions, such as political parties, or religious creeds, and to mingle together prompted by one common impulse, is near at hand. This day, the people of Charlevoix are to celebrate in a manner suitable to the occasion. Last Saturday evening a mass meeting of our citizens was held at the town hall to make arrangements for celebrating the 4th. Judging from the number present, and from the names of those appearing on the committee of arrangement, we can guarantee a good time to those who will favor us with their presence on that day. The committee are to meet Tuesday evening to arrange the programme. We shall be happy to give particulars in our next issue. While we admire the patriotic zeal manifested by many of the towns in the county in getting up local entertainments, yet we must suggest the propriety of joining our issues and all uniting in the celebration of this occasion, which has so properly been made a holiday for the enjoyment of all.

A SUMMER RESORT IN MICHIGAN.—The ministerial brother who sends us the following has no pecuniary interest in the matter of which he writes. Rev. H. N. Burton, of Kalamazoo, and other prominent Michigan ministers have for a few years built cottages in the Summer Resort, and the General Association endorsed the movement at its late meeting at Grand Rapids:

The Michigan State Association having appointed an chairman of the committee to consider the question of, and recommend, if practicable, a summer resort for those of our denomination and others, who may desire to avail themselves of the sanitary advantage of the climate of Northern Michigan, we desire through the ADVANCE to recommend the Christian Resort at Charlevoix, Mich., as undenominational, and one of the best with which we are acquainted. It has all the advantages of climate, air and water that can be desired.

Persons become members of the Resort Association by paying $10, which entitles them to a lot upon which to build a cottage, which they may hold per petuity. To those interested, we say "Come and see."

CHEBOYGAN.—On Wednesday last, Mrs. Thier who resides near Boyne village, was cowardly attacked by two men by the name of Jules, brothers. Mrs. Thier was turning some horses that belonged to the assulting party, from a field of grain, when the latter came upon the scene and during the altercation that followed, one of the men dealt the woman a blow upon the head with a heavy club, inflicting a severe wound. both parties have been in town seeking advice. The Prosecuting Attorney, Hon. E. H. Green, being absent attending court in Manitou county, Mr. Thier has been compelled to postpone the prosecution until his return. Dr. C. A. Pearn, of this place, was called to dress the wounds. He reports Mrs. Thier as being in a critical condition.

THE amount of Carkin, Stickney & Crain's bid on the Charlevoix harbor work is only about $9,000. Consequently there will be left, of the amount available this season, about $4,000. As the specification call for the performance of a stipulated amount of work, "more or less," this surplus will be expended in such a manner as Col. Mans field, in his good judgement may direct. It is more than likely that additional dredging will be done, and possibly some protection put along the shore line inside the piers. Current is that 90,000 cubic yards or more of dredging will be done, which will give a channel twelve feet deep, and at least one hundred feet wide, from lake to lake.

Notes of Travel.

Our Correspondent Visits the Pleasant Village of Boyne Falls.

EDITOR SENTINEL:—

A short time since we had occasion to visit the eastern part of Charlevoix county, and found it convenient to make a halt for the night at Boyne Falls. We put up at the hotel kept by Mr Joseph Powers, and were very courteously entertained. Mr. Powers pleasantly remarked, that the reason he named the place Boyne Falls, was because everybody fell in love with it as soon as they saw it. Nor do we wonder at it, for we could not help falling in love with it ourself. It is "beautiful for situation" like Jerusalem of old.

Mr. Powers is carrying on quite an extensive business in the manufacture of lumber. He has an arrangement, of his own inventing, for sawing stone boat plank on a perfect circle, like a sleigh runner, that interested us much. He ships the stone boats ready made, and has a contract to furnish one thousand this season. Boyne river is about seven miles above Boyne Falls, in some huge cold springs, and so steady is its flow that it never varies in height more than eight or ten inches; hence its great value as a water power as well as a mountain trout stream. Mr. Powers expects to raise his dam three feet this season, which will double its capacity. He keeps a store, and is the postmaster of the place. His is a distributing office and he has to handle about 60 pounds of mail daily.

Mr. Powers has a fine library that contains, among other valuable works, a full set of Appleton's Encyclopedia, new addition. We congratulate any person on the possession of such a prize. Immediately south of Boyne Falls, there is a heavy upward grade in the rail road of 700 ft. in five miles.

Rev. Mr. Redpath is about to begin the erection of a Presbyterian church edifice at the Falls where he preaches once in two weeks. The Methodists are supplied with preaching by the Rev. Mr. Heath.

We called upon Mr. A. D. Carpenter who keeps a well filled dry goods and drug store, and was recognized by him as a former comrade in the war against the late rebellion. Mr. Carpenter is doing a fine business. Success to him.

We also called at the business place of another gentleman about 8 o'clock in the morning, but learned that he was still locked in the embrace of morpheus; however, his polite clerk thought he would be up and dressed by the time we came again.

Mr. J. M. Garrison, late of Ohio, is about to erect a building 24x50 ft. and two stories high, to be used as a furniture store and cabinet shop. From Boyne Falls we walked to the head of Pine Lake, six miles distant, and found the road good, and the country delightful. Next week we may have something to say about Boyne. CLERICUS.

W. A. SMITH, Esq.
Charlevoix, Mich.
Dear Sir:

I have just been reading a copy of the Ludington Tribune in which I saw an extract from your paper in reference to the killing of John Casey by Wallace Flow. In that the sentence occurred viz. "The feeling seems to be gaining strength that it was a premeditated case of murder." I am sorry that such a statement should be given to the public, for I think it a mistake. I think the facts do not justify any such an opinion. Most persons who are well acquainted with the matter consider that it was done in just self-defence. Such an expression inflicts injury upon the accused and his friends, which is unwarranted by facts. Of course, I do not mean to imply wrong on your part, you have simply been misinformed.

Yours truly,
C. N. COLLYER

VACATION.—Friday evening, at precisely fifteen minutes past four, as is customary at closing the Hannibal principal of our Village school came down Bridge street at a rapid pace, stopping not until he reached the post office, where with a bound and a yell he landed among a crowd of astonished citizens, and executed as fine a "pigeon wing" or "double shuffle" as was ever witnessed at Donnybrook fair. We were about to summon the Marshal to keep a cool person, when the professor remarked that it was vacation; that those dark indications about his heart which had taken two deep a draught of free air, and were not the result of delirium tremens. We took in the situation.

A DELIGHTFUL TRIP.—The combination of business necessity and a desire for a short period of relaxation, caused our departure, last week, from the quiet hamlet for the bustle and strife of the great city of Chicago.

It was our happy lot to take passage upon the palatial steamer Idaho, of the Western Transportation Company's line. This steamer has always been a favorite among lake travelers, but since the extensive outlay of the company in the spring of 1878, in preparing her for the Lake Superior route, she has ranked among the finest passenger steamers on fresh water. The Lake Superior trade proved unprofitable, and the company returned her to her old route and placed her again in command of that prime of captains—Penny—a sailor equal to every emergency, in calm or storm, on cabin or on deck, a commander who is always equally on the alert for the comfort and pleasure of his passengers guests as for their safety.

When, in 1870, Sheldon Pease, manager and principal owner of the New York Central Idaho sold the steamers of the line to the Western Transportation Company the Idaho among the number—several of the best Captains, Engineers and Stewards were "sold" with them. Capt. Penny was one of the number, and Steward Grant, is now in serving his twelfth year on the Idaho. Mr. Grant understands every detail of his business, and nothing which comes under his supervision escapes his notice. The most trivial matters pertaining to the comfort of passengers has his attention, and all his patience under trying circumstances reminds one of the patience of Job. It has been our fortune to be a guest on board the Idaho on several occasions, and we have never failed to find it a home where we were always welcomed with a smile, and left with regret. Should you desire a trip to Chicago, or a pleasure trip on the lakes, we can recommend the Idaho as the best boat, and Penny as the best Captain, Engineer and Steward on the lakes.

It seems to have crept into the minds of a few of our subscribers that we esteem it an honor to send the SENTINEL to their address, and that this honor is full compensation for any expense which may accrue to us in the matter. And a remarkable feature of this circumstance is that not a few of these cases are men who are abundantly able to pay for what they receive. They are men who would regard it dishonorable to let a store account of fifty amount run the same length of time they do this, but we see no difference. They receive from us what costs us money, and must pay for it, nor recognize it by a word, writing or verbal. Now, under the circumstances we need every dollar due us, and ask those gentlemen to either pay up, or say something about it.

"Singular," says the Toledo Blade, "how political conditions will change climates. Twenty-five years ago, when the Southerners wanted to force slavery on Kansas, it was represented as to the most salutary spot in the nation for the Negro. Now, when the Negro wants to go there of his own accord, it is full of lizards and other life destroying climate influences.

The editor of a paper presented a man a bill for eight years' back subscription. The old farmer was somewhat amazed and then indignant; he put on his spectacles, scrutinized the bill, and, after scanning himself that it was genuine, he exclaimed, "I've been supporting this paper for eight or ten years, and never had no such things as that hung at the house. I'll stop supportin' it." He not only withdrew his valuable support, but failed to pay the bill.—Ex

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE Island Pond (VL) poisoned-brook horror has assumed another phase. Medical men declare that the children died of diphtheria, and that the disease was generated by the pools of stagnant water under and about the school-house. Boarders who have visited the locality represent a condition of affairs that seems to harmonize with this theory.

THE bandits who "peppered" the new "queen of the Illinois Central Railroad Company," on the 27th, were captured in the 29th, and about $9,000 of the money recovered. Several were concerned in it, who took no active part in the excursion, and gave no help when taken into custody. The officers also secured a list of the names and received a liberal donation of the "peppered" to whom he gave "tit for tat" with the revolver, and has been sued for $50,000.

A TERRIBLE riot occurred on the 15th, at Mattoon, Ill., a station on the Atlantic & Gulf Railroad, between a party of drivers and workmen on the road. The latter were people belonging at McIntosh. It began on a fight between two of the employees of the Cadiz of a party of McIntosh people, led by Bryan Rooney, a part of the excursionists, ordered his company to charge, which they did, but were overpowered within ten minutes. One McNeil killed one man by running him through with his sword. The Lucky Cadiz company rallied and drove the McIntosh party off, but were not able to conquer the men there, killing four and wounding several others, only stopping the shooting when the last round of cards. All the parties engaged were natives.

SENTENCE of death by hanging was pronounced on the 5th, upon Elwell Peterson, convicted by the Hamilton (Indiana) murder by a Fishkill-on-the-Hudson jury on the 8th. Until after the morning Judge had finished, there was no indication entertained, and it was ascertained that he had taken a dose of strychnine. Physicians were called and the usual antidotes given but without avail, and he died next morning.

THE Sixth Annual Conference of National Charities met in Chicago on the 10th, and organized by the election of Stewart L. Belchenoff, of Ohio, as President, and Charles S. Hoyt, of New York, " B. Sanborn, of Massachusetts, A. G. Byers, of Ohio, J. Lee Milligan, of Pennsylvania, Fred H. Wines, of Illinois, Henry W. Lord, of Michigan, and T. D. Lanagan, of Wisconsin, as Secretaries. A large number of distinguished persons were in attendance, including the Governors of several of the States.

A DRIFTING struck the pump-house of the Atlantic Refining Company, in the southern part of Philadelphia, on the morning of the 11th, and set fire to the oil. The flames soon communicated to the adjoining warehouses in which was a large quantity of crude and refined oil. Immense volumes of flame soon spread out for a great distance along the river front. Five alarms were sent in and several hundred men were employed in fighting the fierce flames, which, however, caused a total loss of almost $1,000,000.

IN New York City on the morning of the 13th, Mrs. Jane Hall, wife of Dr. J. J. Hall, was found dead in her bed, with her feet and hands tied, a bandage about her eyes and a gag in her mouth. Her trunk was rifled of its contents and several articles of jewelry had been taken, among them the rings in her ears and those upon her fingers. The thieves entered the house by the front door.

JOHN LAMB, convicted of killing a Chicago policeman and sentenced to be hung, has been granted a supersedeas by the Illinois Supreme Court.

THE Treasury Department at Washington has recently decided to thereafter fill orders for the standard silver dollars in sums as low as $100.

A SEVERE wind, rain and hail storm visited portions of New Jersey on the 13th. At Hoboken and Trenton trees were uprooted, roofs carried away and several buildings blown down.

ABOUT 12:20 o'clock on the morning of the 14th, an alarm of fire was given in Chicago. A hose cart started from the North Side of the river to cross the bridge at State street. But at the edge of the bridge it was discovered that the draw was open, and horse, cart and two men plunged into the river twenty feet below. The cart and the horse were drowned.

ACCORDING to returns received by the Department of Agriculture on the 14th, the area of cotton was two per cent greater this year than last. The condition was also two-tenths, against ninety-nine last year. The average condition of winter wheat on the 1st was ninety, against ninety-eight in 1878, and the average of spring wheat was four per cent greater in 1879 than in the year preceding.

THE subscriptions to the four-per-cent consolidated certificates up to the evening of the 14th aggregated $20,875,650.

AT Salt Lake on the 14th, George R. Reynolds, the Mormon convicted of polygamy, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $500. This is the first conviction of a Mormon for this offense since the passage of the act of 1862.

AT Buffalo Gap, Dakota, on the 15th, eleven persons were drowned by the sudden rise and overflow of Beaver Creek, caused by a cloud-burst. They were emigrating to the Black Hills.

ONE Nugent, a policeman, has been arrested in New York upon the charge of complicity in the Manhattan Savings Bank robbery.

AT Boswell, Ind., on the 14th, one hundred and fifty persons took shelter during a severe thunder-storm in a log lumber shed. As they stood huddled together a bolt of lightning descended in their midst, killing two and seriously injuring six others, three of them fatally.

Personal and Political.

THE National House of Representatives passed, on the 9th, the Legislative and Executive Appropriation Bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations, by a vote of 198 yeas to 77 nays. All political significance had been subdued from the call. The votes against it were all from the Democratic, who opposed the passage of an important appropriation bill under a suspension of the rules.

Conkling, Hoar and Blaine and briefer remarks by almost all the other Senators present, it was agreed, with substantial unanimity, that "the passage of the Army Appropriation bill at this session before the Senate should be opposed by the Republican party in that body, unless the majority would consent to the addition of a proviso to the sixth section declaring that it should not be construed to prevent the use of troops to execute any existing laws. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JUNE 24, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 20, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

It would hardly be accurate to say that all New York has been up at West Point this week, for that enchanting spot has not even temporary accommodation for one per cent. of the Gothamites; but at all events, great crowds of the elite of this and other cities have swarmed upon its hotel piazzas, roamed through its romantic groves and lanes, and stood admiringly about the parade ground, from Monday until Thursday. The event, of course, was the graduating exercises of the class of '79, who are now full blown army officers (albeit at the foot of the ladder,) ready, and most of them anxious, to enter active service at the Far West.

There are few spots on the continent which can vie with West Point in beauty and refined splendor of scenery. Nature has done everything for it in the way of contour and variety. The masses of rock and forest verdure piled in careless symmetry, the broad river winding below and stretching north wand in full sight for ten miles between high and heavily undulating banks, the views of melting blue distance, and the delicate and luxuriant vegetation near at hand, give a rare landscape from every standpoint, and suggest the wish for a lifetime of luxurious ease in which to enjoy such varied loveliness. But who dares talk of luxurious ease at West Point? Shades of the martinets! I am almost afraid to publish this, lest General Scofield should send down here and have me put under arrest, and victim was found tightly bound to the perhaps courtmartialed and shot, for bed and gagged. Some articles of value giving utterance to such an incendiary were missing, but others of greater suggestion. I assure you that nature worth were undisturbed. No clue has monopolizes ease and repose at West been found to indicate how the murPoint. Nothing animate has any busderer or murderers gained ingress and iness there with luxury or easy going egress, and no motive for the crime can civilian comfort, and even such inanibe imagined. The mystery thus far is mate things as the cadets' barracks and complete, but the police are working officers' quarters have the uncompro- hard and hope to get on the trail at misingly square cut look about them last.

which impels the sensitive observer to involuntarily square his shoulders and fall into a sort of military step as he passes them by. The close shaven parade ground is one vast carpet of emerald velvet, upon whose prim perfection no straw or leaf would dare intrude itself any more than it would venture to invade the general's well scrubbed sidewalk, up and down which a sentry constantly paces.

The crocus of "sprouts" through which the cadets are put is, as might be inferred, even if the fact had not been so frequently reiterated, a pretty severe thing all of the four years' course. Beside mastering the alstruse studies which are administered in heroic doses, and constant drilling with heavy rifles, the boys have to learn by hard experience everything which a common soldier is expected to know. They have to keep their own beds, keep their uniforms and guns in immaculate condition, and perform for themselves every menial service. Some of them come to the Academy from luxurious homes, and from the enjoyment of every liberty and comfort. To such the iron rule and machine-like life at Uncle Sam's school seems inhuman for a while, of course. But there is no use objecting. Excuses are unknown here, and the authorities possess no bowels of compassion whatever. However, all this discipline is salutary, if one may judge from the appearance of its subjects, for a neater, trimmer, healthier looking set of boys I never saw together.

Of the exercises of this week I can say but a little. The rigorous examinations ended, Wednesday was devoted, to the reception of distinguished visitors and to a review before them of the cadets. I witnessed this review and the subsequent dress parade, both of which were sights worth seeing. Every position was performed with the most soldierly precision, and apparently to the great satisfaction of the aristocratic and rainbow-hued throng of lay spectators, as well as that of the more or less illustrious visitors, for whose special benefit the movements were executed. One group of the latter, near which I stood, contained Secretary of War McCrary, General W. T. Sherman, General Schofield, commandant of the post, Chief Justice Waite (who had a son among the graduates), President Noah Porter, of Yale College, Chas. O'Conor, and several other notables in and out of uniform. A grand ball was given in the evening, at which the belles of a dozen cities shone like stars, and at which the cadets, released from stern discipline for the occasion, basked in the soft radiance of the aforesaid, and were as gay as so many larks. It is only once a year that the youngsters get this chance during their stay at the Academy; but for that one evening they certainly do have a jolt thing; for the girls all adore a uniform on principle, and the rarity of their opportunities to flirt with the cadets, causes those opportunities to be improved to the utmost. Small chance, therefore, had the ordinary biped in a black suit on this occasion. He was simply nowhere, and the dapper young warriors, with their straight figures encased in tight fitting gray jackets and white trousers, had things all their own way.

Thursday, the graduates received their diplomas, and listened to speeches from President Porter, Chief Justice Waite, and Generals Sherman and Pope, and then the grand fete was brought to a close.

The week in New York has not been publicly eventful. The future historic page will I fear contain no reference to it whatever, unless it be some mention of a strange murder which may find a place in the annals of crime alongside the unsolved mysteries of the Nathan and Burdell assassinations. A lady of good family, of some wealth and great energy, a member of Sorosis and, as inferentially speculator in Wall street, was found on Wednesday morning dead in her bed in the handsome up town mansion in which she lived with her husband. The latter slept in another part of the house, and neither he nor any other inmate of the building heard any disturbance during the night. The

Other little episode in connection with a murder may also be mentioned. A man and woman have just been convicted in Jersey City and sentenced to death for the killing of the latter's husband on what is considered very insufficient evidence. An appeal would cost the prisoners $1,000, and as they were penniless, they could do nothing toward getting the further hearing. Miss Emma Abbott, the singer, took up their cause, and going down to Wall street on Thursday afternoon, obtained the subscriptions of a dozen or more brokers to the required amount, collected the money, and turned it over to the friends of the prisoners, who, through the humane energy of this young woman, will doubtless get another chance for their lives.

RADIX.

The Democratic majority in Congress is backing down completely. Last Monday, the Legislative and Executive appropriation bill, stripped of all political features, passed the House. Only eighteen votes against it, and they were all Democrats. On the same day Representative Hyan, Republican, of Kansas, moved that the rules be suspended, and the Army appropriation bill put on its passage. Careful examination of the political sections convinced the leading Republicans that they were harmless, and it was decided to support the bill as it stood; but this unexpected willingness on the part of the Republicans frightened the Democratic majority, and they immediately adjourned till next day, not daring to let their own bill come to a vote. They thought there must be a "nigger under the wood pile" somewhere, that had escaped their observation, hence the fright and adjournment.

The Confederate majority in Congress has heard that Gen. Grant is expected home in a few weeks, and they begin to manifest an anxiety to adjourn at an early day. It isn't the first time they have been anxious to leave when he was coming.

An Impassible Gulf

From the Lapeer Clarion.

Among the indications of a healthy reaction from that over hasty generosity toward the lately rebellious south—a reaction occasioned largely by the overbearing demeanor of the rebel brigadiers who have come back to Washington "to stay," are the utterances of many of the Decoration-day orators. Gen. Hamilton, the orator at Washington, publicly retraced a somewhat gushing expression of forgiveness made in his address of the previous year, and others whose remarks have been published have put themselves fairly on the ground that it is soon enough to grant pardon when the wrongdoer expresses somewhat his desire to be pardoned.

Capt. J. H. Palmer, of this city, in his address at Fenton, no doubt uttered the thought of the loyal people of the land when he said: "I cannot forbear insisting on this thought of our personal obligation to the country, and our duty in this manner to honor those who greatly labored and uncomplainingly suffered that we might have a country. We are to be forgiving to the uttermost. It is our duty as citizens of a reunited nation, to sink into the depths of everlasting forgetfulness all the animosities engendered by those of strife and sorrow; but in our forgiveness and forgetfulness, we are not to lose sight of the truth that between the man who in the nation's hour of peril was a patriot, and the other man who was a traitor, lies an impassable gulf, and they cannot come together in the thought of the true lover of his country. Treason is the most terrible of all crimes, and nothing that your tongue or mine may utter, nothing that your head or mine may do, ought ever to be so said or done as to lead those who learn their lessons of fealty from us to think otherwise. If there rest to-day in your cemetery the ashes of a fallen foe, lay over them the white chaplet of forgiveness, but do not forget that forgiveness is not honor. The hand that struck at the flag of our fathers can never be, if, as in the hand that dying still strove to save it, until we have in our hearts ceased to love that flag and the liberty of which it is the symbol; until we have come to look upon the sufferings and the death of the union soldier as an idle, meless, unworthy sacrifice."

Making Republicans.

From the Bay City Chronicle and Tribune.

A gentleman who called at this office yesterday on business remarked, "The Chronicle and Tribune is making lots of Republicans these days; or, rather, the course of the Democrats in Congress is making them. I have always been a Democrat, but if the majority in Congress are preaching Democratic doctrine I am not a Democrat any longer, and shall vote the Republican ticket." This is the way hundreds of the old way Democrats are talking. They never expected to see the country at the mercy of the Confederates, and when they see such men as Blackburn, Chalmers, Vance, Ben Hill, Wade Hampton, Joe Johnston and other prominent rebels of the rebel army controlling the party through the caucus, and hear them defending secession and preaching the states rights doctrine which brought on the war, they make up their minds they don't want any more of that in their'n.

They see that the lost cause is seeking to recover in the halls of legislation what it lost on the field of battle.

Senator Matt. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, who has been in the habit of smoking twenty cigars a day, is suffering so severely from tobacco poisoning that his life is in danger, and his physicians have ordered rest and a visit to Florida for his health.

Rev. Dr. Samuel S. Harris, rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, of Chicago, has been elected Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan by the convention at Detroit. The vote stood 88 to 66.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as white Coon. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint is the direct cause of seventy five per cent of such maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the head Palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles 10 cents. Try it. For sale at G. W. Cronter's.

THE LOUISIANA SENATORIAL CONTEST.

The United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections began on the 5th the examination of witnesses in the Spofford-Kellogg contest. J. J. Johnson reiterated what had said at the Kellogg and Pitkin meeting, where Kellogg was present, and was examined by Mr. Merrick. Spofford's counsel, and endeavored to locate the declaration made to his self-control upon occasion of which witness testified that it was moved Ward persuaded him to sign the affidavit, and that Ward was present at the time of the Custom House. No other witnesses were examined.

On the 6th, the counsel for contestant offered in evidence the affidavit of Joseph J. Johnson in support of the credibility of Johnson, and concluded the introduction of documents, and also by the introduction for proof that this witness, since making the affidavit, had been subjected to the influences of executive benefits and political patronage. Mr. Shellabarger, of the counsel for Kellogg, objected, and the committee required counsel to submit the legal authorities upon which they relied.

Thomas Murray continued that DeLacy had told him he had made an affidavit, and he (Murray) left a memorandum book what he had sworn to. He could not be induced to look at it. Witness said he had himself told DeLacy that he expected to make $2,000.

On the 9th, Thomas Murray (colored) was recalled, and testified that, when he told he (he) he could make $2,000, he meant that if he came to Washington and told the truth he would make a reputation with his people where would be worth $2,000 to him.

John Sprowl testified that he was a member of the Packard Legislature in 1872, and was present when one Jones (corrected to Johnson) and W. Kellogg in the Senate. Mr. Merrick the witness an affidavit, which he identified and signed. This affidavit stated that he (witness) was a member of the Legislature in session over 1872 when Mr. Kellogg was elected for the term of six years; that he was present when, in reply to questions by contestant's counsel, witness said Mr. Johnson's statement of the affidavit were true, and that he had a conversation with Johnson in Lincoln Parish, Judge Bonner, J. W. Elder, and others. Conversation took place in April, 1873. Those were all that he remembered. The bill among those read to witness was one to locate the State Capital. Witness knew Mr. Kellogg before he was elected. Witness knew Mr. Kellogg when he was elected. Witness knew Mr. Kellogg was in the city and of the Senate during the session of the Legislature that elected him to serve lately; was present at his inauguration; saw him sworn in as a Senator; knew him to stand by his affidavit; did not make the affidavit in any way under duress; knew all the affidavit and Johnson; never heard Kellogg say that he did not stand to swear to it; knew of no reason why he should not stand to swear to it; knew of no reason why he should not stand by it; knew of no reason why he should not stand by it; knew of no reason why he should not stand by

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

A Visit of Our Correspondent to Boyne.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Our recent visit to Boyne or "the Head of the Lakes," as it is popularly called, was most gratifying. The place began its existence several years ago, but within the last twelve months has taken a new lease of life, and is now known as rapidly as any village in the county. Its natural advantages are great, being located at the head of navigation on Pine Lake, and at the mouth of the beautiful Boyne river, which may yet become as historical as that of the Emerald Isle. The water portion of the original village is owned by Mr. Gen. Bowlsley, formerly of Saginaw, a prince of good fellows—only one fault can be found with him—a little too fat. Hon. Mr Nichols of Charlevoix, in company with a Mr. Morgan, have platted a large addition to the village on the south, which is being rapidly cleared and already has several buildings in process of erection which others to follow in the near future. The contract is left for a new school house 24x36 which is to be finished the present season. The town is soon to have a new and commodious hotel which is being erected by Mr. G. W. White. Its size is 30x48 and two stories high, with a wing. The building is well under way and will be opened to the public the present season. The "Pine Lake House," A. J. Hall proprietor, is receiving needed and liberal improvements.

Regular stages are run between Boyne and Boyne Falls, by Messrs. Hall and Mitchell, making daily connections with the boats and trains. They have a new and splendid stage manufactured by Mr. D. C. Nettleton of Charlevoix.

The merchantile houses are as follows: D. V. Monroe, hardware and groceries; Richardson & Kingsley, dry goods and groceries; C. G. Batchelor, groceries and provisions; Postmaster Thompson, groceries and stationery, all of whom seem to be doing a fair business with encouraging prospects for the future.

The large and powerful saw and shingle mill, White Bros., proprietors, was under full blast and smoking lumber at a rapid rate. They have 175,000 feet of logs in these booms.

As a natural depot for wood, bark and ties, we know of no place in Northern Michigan that excels Boyne. We saw in part among other vessels, the spacious three master Frankie Wilcox of Cleveland, taking on a cargo of lumber for Joseph Bowers of Boyne Falls.

Boyne has a park which is destined to become somewhat celebrated, as it contains 84 varieties of trees, which if well pruned and cared for must make an attractive spot.

Mr. Crane, late of New York, has completed a new blacksmith shop, and is building a fine residence on the Nicholls and Morgan plat. Mr. Monroe and others are to build residences this season.

The place is regularly supplied with preaching by the Baptists and Methodists, each of whom contemplate building parsonages soon. We judge that the morals of the place will compare favorably with those of older towns, notwithstanding the saying of that celebrated sage who wrote that "the tendency of all new countries is to harbor lies."

We committed to say that Boyne has a good grist mill, which is a desideratum in every town. A. J. Beardsley is proprietor, who at present grinds out perhaps as many shingles as anything else. On the whole we were much pleased with the place and believe it has a bright future before it. Its people are enterprising, intelligent and courteous to strangers. As to temperance we saw one gentleman wearing a flaming red ribbon in his button hole, which he said was to take effect the following night at midnight. We shall be interested to learn the history of that red ribbon. CRANBERA.

Important to Homesteaders.

By a recent act of Congress important changes have been made in the homestead law. No person will be permitted to make final proof until notice has been given according to said act. Any settler desiring to make final proof, must file with the register a written notice of the fact. Such notice must fully describe the land as stated in the original papers, and must be published in some newspaper nearest to the lands described. The notice to be given to the register must state that application to make final proof has been filed. To save expense, the register may embrace two or more applications, where it can be done consistently with the requirements of law. When the proof required has been filed according to law that fact being has been proven, the applicant will be entitled to receive final proof according to law in town at the passage of the above act, said proof being the certificate of the register that the notice of said application was by him posted in his office. Frank Firms will be furnished upon application to the Land Office at Reed City.

There is no longer any doubt that the friends of Senator Chandler intend to push him prominently from the Bloody Shirt portion manned as a Presidential candidate before the next National Convention. They are actively looking over the ground, and some work has already been done, both in the National Committee and out of it. It is also understood that the Senator is in the hands of his friends for the purpose they have in view. They declare that they can claim for him with perfect confidence that he would take no honest advantage, and not in regard to all pending National issues he would give the Union loving people no strong a Government as on Constitution and laws will allow. Though he has not yet written the conventional private letter on the subject, it may be taken for granted that at an early day Senator Chandler will appear on the track.

The American bark Hermann sailed lately from New York on the second passage to Liberia. On board were about 600 negroes, who have been gathered from Arkansas, the Carolinas, and other sections of the country by agents of the colonization society, to be sent out under care of Rev. C. S. Brown, who has been 25 years president of Liberia. Also among the passengers was Hon. A. L. Stanford, late Senator for the Fourteenth District of Arkansas, who, having previously visited and selected a desirable location, is now taking out his family and some friends to live there. There are also several missionaries among the party.

The Annuity granted the aged and recreant Bishop McCoskry, on the condition that he go abroad, never to return, has been taken from him by the democratic convention. This severs every tie of the Episcopal church with the unhappy ex prelate. The wandering transgressor is now an exile without resources in Europe.

The last issue of the Lansing Republican says: "An effort was made by State Treasurer Pritchard this spring to purchase and retire the Michigan bonds due in 1883. About $100,000 of these securities are held by the eminent banking house of Hope & Co. of Amsterdam. Their agents in New York James B. Kling, have been writing to Gen. Pritchard that their homeside offer, he has sold exchange Michigan 6's on even terms for United States 4½'s reading until 1891, but will they surrender them at that time for from then 10 per cent premium, with accrued interest. Such is the tribute of a philosophic Dutch firm to the honesty of the Pennsylvania State, and such is the credit she has gained after 25 years of Republican administration."

A man can't key in political plans as Jefferson Davis could not be expected to leave any accurate knowledge of the scriptures. In a speech to the Mississippi Editors Convention he put this upon record:

"That dark hour, thank God, had passed away, and Mississippians more reverenced Mississippi, and, through weeks, sackcloth and ashes, exercised the language of Job, 'I believe my Redeemer liveth.'"

Jeff and redeemer, for avenger. If Mr. Davis knows of any redeemer for Mississippi, he should not keep him secret.

Senator Chandler will take the stump in Ohio as soon as Congress adjourns, and J. C. Burrows, of the Kalamazoo district, will give two or three weeks each to Ohio and Maine.

McLean has opened up in his new meat market. Mac undoubtedly has as fine an institution of the kind as can be found within a hundred miles of Charlevoix. He has all the tools and appurtenances that can be thought of in connection with a meat market, including an expensive cooling room.

CROSS & DORMAN slipper with a new advertisement this week. Their firm, during the short time they have been in Charlevoix, have manifested a disposition to be rather in advance of the demand than behind it, and the result has been that Charlevoix is favored with an institution which is more than creditable. In the bakery, grocery and private boarding house business Cross & Dorman are a success.

WHY NOT.—Why not have as fine a boulevard right here in Charlevoix as they have at Mackinac or any other leading summer resort. A comparitively small amount of work laid out on the road from the Village to the Resort, and from thence to Stover's mill, where the cemetery road is intersected, would make as pleasant a two mile drive as any one could desire. The road from the Village to Stover's mill via the cemetery is now in fine condition, and with no grading, and the use of a quantity of gravel and clay, would give us a boulevard that would constitute a leading factor in our efforts to make Charlevoix the summer resort of the North. Why not?

CHANGE IN MAIL ROUTES.—The Department at Washington have notified the Postmaster at Charlevoix, that after July 1st the mail between Elk Rapids and Charlevoix, will continue to Antrim City and Norwood, omitting Bernard. This change will only disappoint Barnard postoffice. Of this no fair exception can be taken by the inhabitants of Mr. Bartleman to have the line of mail running to us all put on the north side. The surplus of the appropriation over and above the contract money, will be expended in dredging Fisherman's point will be taken off clear and considerable of that at Round's barn. The Col thinks there will be no difficulty in making twelve feet of water now and keeping it open. It is assured. The change is expected daily.

MARINE.—The City of Grand Rapids will make her first trip from Traverse City to Charlevoix and Petoskey, next Monday.

The steamer Clara Belle came over Saturday evening, and went to the head of Pine Lake Sunday.

—The steamer Gazelle excursion to Beaver Harbor Sunday was well patronized.

—The steamer Booth went up the Lake Sunday.

—The steamer Clara Bells is going from Northport to Pine Lake on an excursion the Fourth.

SIDE WALKS.—The idea seems to have become lodged in the minds of many of our Village people that to make a secure side walks, it is necessary to move six and through the most honorable and august body known as the Common Council of the Village of Charlevoix. This, in our opinion is an error. Any person desiring to construct a sidewalk can do so, providing he builds it at least four feet wide, and of two inch plank, and there is no probability that he will be interfered with. It is a notable fact that Charlevoix has not a few well to do citizens, occupying good residences, that are abundantly able to construct sidewalks in front of their premises, and yet do not. Now this circumstance is a reproach to these, and discreditable to our village. Why don't these men, who are able to buy planes and loan money, inject a little of public spirit into their constitution and show it this sidewalk matter. Don't let it be said that your poorer neighbors are ahead of you in public spirit. Wake up on this question.

THE COUNCIL.—No business of great importance, outside of the regular ordinances published on the inside of this paper—was transacted at the last meeting of the Village Council.

A petition signed by twelve freeholders was presented asking for the extension of Bridge street south over the Mason Hill.

The committee on licenses is reporting the ordinances published in this issue, embodied in their preamble a rather emphatic recommendation that no licenses be imposed upon transient peddlers and floating traders. They are pleased to call that sort of "pigeon class legislation." that where class legislation commences and ends in a moderate and just taxation of this kind of trade, they don't tell us, and they might have been reminded that from the same kind of reasoning our tax laws, as effecting floating peddlers in Charlevoix, are class legislation, because they are against resident dealers, and in favor of transient peddlers, who contribute not a dime to the local public revenues. We favor wholesome competition, but traits of that kind is not competition and has no effect on trade, from its unsettled nature. Let it contribute lightly toward the expense of making laws which are calculated so much for its protection as for our local merchants. Mr. Eaton, of the committee, dissented from the views of the majority of the committee

THE OWL-CRITIC.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES.

We strolled that whitewash'd Ann one night in the latter "ten hours," and he couldn't take the unbounden, waiting their turns, ears all freedom.

The "Owl," the Herald, the Post, little heeding the poetry men who fabricated our local "stuff" but our raised a head to even make a suggestion.

And the barber kept on shaving.

I don't you see, Mister Brown,
Comin the north with a frown,
How impudence sails around
How impudence sails around
In short, the whole local situation seemed wank

I make no apology
I'm learning geology;
For passed downward eights in a hundred collection

And cannot be brushed to any other tune
Arising from your fatal blunder
Matter brass, Master Brown!
He take that hint down.
Or you'll feel the full weight of all our

And the barber kept on shaving.

I see wisdom
In your right boots,
Which I admire quite so,
Because
You've got on the same
As our own mayor, Mr. Bill,
Tells his pants to be ordered,
Except in this case,
Your boots are not cowhide,
But rather of calf,
Which makes them look neater,
Though not quite so durable,
And cannot be brushed to any other tune
Arising from your fatal blunder
Matter brass, Master Brown!
He take that hint down.
Or you'll feel the full weight of all our

And the barber kept on shaving.

I'm sorry
I'm losing
Your custom,
But, as I've said before,
And to see such a job almost moves me to tears
Plainly shown, I recommend
You should be no longer
As to put on a long
Is your present shaving!
Do not at first owl raise brings on a dizziness;
The man who suffered much and don't half know his business

And the barber kept on shaving.

I admire those eyes
Of that self-styled corpse
Inadvertents should pass
Of the "Owl" critic's
So smeared this week
Don't make a shilling
And John Burroughs enough
To encourage such critics
It take that bird down.
Or you'll feel the full weight of all our

And the barber kept on shaving.

With direct lack of method and
A corpse-like air
Has not known many days
Has not known many days
I could have told him
Long ago there on sad
That that horrid howl,
Which his lines so stiff like a side of mutton
Is not
In fact, about that there's not one natural

And the barber kept on shaving.

Just then with a wink and a few general lurch,
He spat, very gracefully, got down from his perch,
Walked out of the door-way, and then with a curse
Was off to the police-station to report a case of

And the barber kept on shaving.

The Last of the Bonapartes.

There is something both tragic and pathetic in the death of the young prince Louis Napoleon, the uncrowned descendant of the greatest though the briefest imperial dynasty of modern history. The son of an emperor, the grand nephew—if historical records are to be preferred to the chroniques scandaleuses—of a greater emperor, who was the conqueror and ruler of Europe, this poor boy has died in alien service, in a barbarous land, at the hands of savages. Even those who do not sympathize with the cause which he represented cannot but feel sorrow at his death. With his birth and his training he could only be what he was—the representative and embodiment of the imperialist party in France. Had he lived he might repeated his father's history and again established the empire; for, though the republic now seems on a stable foundation, the history of France shows with what facility its fickle people can abandon one system of government for another. But in his death imperialism has lost its only representative who had the slightest hold upon the enthusiasm of the French people. The sole remaining prominent member of the family is the Prince Napoleon, a son of Jerome Bonaparte by his second wife the first was Miss Patterson of Baltimore, who died only a few weeks ago. He is now nearly sixty years old, and unpopular with the Bonapartists, having allied himself with the Republicans. So, with the death of the young prince, the last danger to the Republic from imperialism has disappeared—a danger far greater than was ever threatened by the Bourbon imbecility of the Count de Chambord, or the common place ambitions of the family of Orleans.

Notwithstanding this, the most ardent republican cannot but feel a pang of regret at this sudden and terrible ending of a young and gallant life. While a mere child, the prince showed courage and good conduct in the Franco Prussian war. In his exile he was a diligent son and a faithful student. When the recent war in South Africa broke out, he attested his gratitude to the country which had given him a refuge by enlisting in her army, and has served in the South African war with patience and bravery. It is not possible to withhold hearty sympathy and respect from this young soldier, in whose death so many hopes were wrecked, lying stark and slain in the long grasses of an African wilderness.

From this ghastly spectacle the mind turns inevitably to that widowed and childless mother at Chiselhurst. In her desolate bereavement there is no republican so radical as not to pity her, no moralist so severe as not to forgive her. What a career has been hers—what sudden grandeur and power—what utter and complete eclipse of hope and joy! An adventurer herself, though beautiful and of noble birth, promoted, by the choice of an emperor who was himself an adventurer, to the highest position held by any woman in Continental Europe, ruling for eighteen years the whole world of fashion, celebrated by poets for her beauty and her intelligence, she is now an exile, husbandless, childless, hopeless, her empire gone, her friends unfaithful, her emperor dead, and her son, in whom centered alike all her maternal affections and her imperial ambitions, the victim of barbarian warriors in a savage land.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

There is now a good prospect for laying a submarine cable to the island of Mackinac.

The Cincinnati Commercial predicts a Republican majority of 25,000 in Ohio next October.

The difference between the position in 1860 and 1880 will be easily defined. In 1860 the Democratic cry was "Down with the Union;" in 1880 it will be "Down with the measures that saved the Union."

Robert G. Morrison, late Treasurer of the Michigan Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, who has been under charges of embezzling the funds of the order, has been tried in the Ingham Circuit Court and honorably acquitted. There is a shortage of $2,000 and Morrison was elected of appropriating it. He has always protested his innocence. Now it has proved it, and the guilty cash

LONDON, June 20

The following are the additional particulars of the death of the Prince Imperial: The body of the Prince when found lay on its back. There were eighteen assegai stabs in it, two of them entering the body from the chest to the back, two in the side, and one shattering the right eye. A locket with hair and ribbons and a rolled gold watch and chain were found around his neck. The face wore a placid expression. He had evidently ineffectually tried to mount his horse, and the leather on the near strap he was also doing the path to shoulder was found. Two troopers lay near the body, both unscathed. The Prince was very handsome.

An official account says the Prince, with Lieutenant Carey, of the Ninety-eighth Regiment, in command, and friendly Zulu, left the camp at Kelsal Mountain, seven miles beyond Blood River, on the 1st instant, for a reconnoissance. The party halted and unsaddled when ten miles from camp. Just as the Prince gave the order to remount a volley was fired from an ambush in the long grass. Lieutenants Carey and some of the troopers rode hurried to the camp and reported that the Prince and two troopers were missing from their statements some could be seen. Nothing more was killed. A party of the Seventeenth Lancers, with an ambulance, started on the id instant to recover the body of the Prince which was found and brought in on the same day.

A special dispatch says: "At daybreak a cavalry patrol, under General Marshall, left to search for the Prince, and went to the kraals, ten miles further on. The body was discovered among the long grass, three hundred yards from the kraal. There was no bullet wound, but seventeen assegai wounds were in front of the body. The clothes had been taken, but round his neck was the chain with a small stretcher on linnen was formed, and the body borne by General Marshall and fifteen Lancers, five and Sergeant of the Seventeenth Lancers, met the ambulance, by which it was brought hither with the escort. There was a funeral parade in the afternoon. Deep sorrow prevails throughout the column. The Prince did not mount after the attack, his horse being restless, but ran about. The corpse will leave with an escort for transportation homeward.

Another special from South Africa says the Price Imperial had been sent forward by the Lieutenant-General to search the bar for the next camping. When the volley was fired, not a single Zulu was to be seen. The party was pursued by a large force, and a rather severe. The Prince was never seen alive again. His horse joined Lieutenant Carey's party on the road back to camp.

The London Standard says: "We deeply deplore the Prince's death, regard it as the end of Imperialism in France.

NEW YORK, June 20.

The Cosmopolitan Herald says, speaking of the death of the Prince Imperial: "The Bonaparte party may be considered the only one left of value in France. The Republicans, instead of rejoicing over the dramatic event which removes them of the presence of a pretender of no mean caliber, will rather think of the fate of this young man, who probably would have worthily filled the throne of the country which he was born to love, instead of remaining over the dramatic event which removes them of the presence of a pretender of no mean caliber, will rather think of the fate of this young man, who probably would have worthily served the country if he had been the son of Napoleon III.

Prince Napoleon, who has become the head of the house is in favor of a republic, and is distasteful to the entire Bonapartist following. He has two sons, seventeen and fifteen respectively. Party loyalty may fasten around the name of one of these sons but for a time the imperial contests must be distracted, and the possibility of the return of the Empire now appears more shadowy than ever.

A Brave Horse-Catcher.

For the past eight or ten years the public has from time to time read of the daring exploits of Mr. James Findley, of this city, whose prowess has won for him the sobriquet of "The Horse-Catcher." During his residence in Syracuse he has caught over two hundred runaway horses, saving many from by their daring efforts, and much property from destruction. Mr. Findley is a modest and unassuming young man, born in the City of Albany, who came to Syracuse some eighteen years ago. Although only twenty-three years old, he has a wife and family, and has served five years at his trade as a carriage-painter. About twelve years ago (says the Utica correspondent of the Albany) of rambling runaway horses. He was somewhat timid at first, as may be imagined, but he gained confidence in himself as he succeeded and experimented, and now does not hesitate to throw himself in the pathway of the most infuriated steed in its terrifying runaway career. Findley's first experience as a horse-catcher was in the City of Auburn. He was waiting for a train in the vicinity of the depot one afternoon twelve years ago, when all at once his attention was attracted by a runaway horse, which was coming toward him at a break-neck pace. In the wagon were seated a lady and her little child. The mother was paralyzed with fear and could not speak. The little child screamed in terror, and the shrieks of the bystanders were likewise as they saw the frightened, maddened horse dashing furiously toward a train of cars that stood across the street. The spectators all rushed out of the way, and Dutchman and draymen ran to a place of safety. Findley saw in an instant that the occupants of the wagon would be killed if they were thrown against the train of cars. Without hesitating a moment he planted himself directly in front of the maddened beast and sprung like a cat at its head. He threw the horse down, and, although the wagon was overturned, the occupants were uninjured, save by mere scratches. Since then he has thrown himself in the way of and stopped hundreds of horses under circumstances equally as dangerous. His method is as follows: When he sees a runaway horse approaching he plants himself directly in its route, and, runs with it in the same direction it is proceeding. Findley can run like a deer, and by the time the runaway horse is abreast of him, nine times out of ten he is running as fast as the horse is. To seize him by the check-rein or one line and bring him to a halt is but the work of an instant. If circumstances are such as to be fraught with great danger, and he may be said to take his life in his hands every time he attempts to stop a horse. It is known that a runaway horse is blinded by rage, it is supposed, or by fear—and Findley's life would not be worth much if the maddened animal were to hit him with its iron shoe. He has received no official reward for his valiant service, and in many instances the greed of those whose lives he has saved has so overmastered them that they have forgotten all about the bravery of the man who risked his life to save theirs. The horse-catcher is always on the lookout. Three-fourths of the runaways are caused by the horses of countrymen. They are easily frightened, and as a general thing their harness is old and unsafe. Ladies who are driving in the streets are in constant danger from being run into by frightened horses from the country. The horse-catcher travels around the business streets and carefully looks over all the country horses that are hitched, examining their fastenings to see if they are secure. In many instances he has found horses hitched with weak or broken straps, and, keeping his eye upon them, has seen them watch their opportunity and start in run. But he was there in time to head them off. He studies the disposition of the horse, and can tell at his eye or his ears if any restless instinct that he is watching for an opportunity to run away.

Perhaps the bravest act of his life was performed on the 5th of May last. A team of young horses was running at breakneck speed down West Genesee street and across the market in front of the Empire House directly toward the Syracuse Savings Bank in an instant more they would have plunged into that building. Findley saw them coming and sprang in their path. He seized one by the check rein and vaulted upon its back, lightly as a bird. By a superhuman effort he succeeded in turning the horses in their course, and brought them down to the ground. The brave act was witnessed by Patrick Lynch, Esq., who determined that it should not go unrewarded. He therefore caused a handsome bronze medal to be struck off, upon which the deed was commemorated in lifting terms, and presented to Mr. Findley. It seems to us that the city authorities should make some substantial recognition of Mr. Findley's services.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Courier.

A New England Romance.

A correspondent from Boston writes: "We have had April showers enough this year in all conscience, and May flowers ought to be abundant. But what one can only become passionately fond of a poor little withered bunch, of half a dozen blossoms framed in wiry evergreens, by buying it of some little ragamuffin of a boy, or those Mayflower women. Just yesterday one of these flower women? If you have been in the Hub in the season you cannot have failed to notice her, for she always stands in an embowered nest the corners of Washington and Winter streets, with a basket of the little nosegays, and a patient look on her poor, pale, withered face. She wears a simple gown, and shawl, and bonnet, aways neat, but O, so poor and pitiful! Did you know that she comes from the hills of New Hampshire, where Mayflowers grow in profusion, and that, when she was young and charming (like Little Buttercup), her youthful farmer-lover used to bring her great bunches of the lovely blossoms fragrant with dew, once that they used to pledge each other that this should always be their chosen flower, and that they would never remember? Did you know how they were secretly married, these young things, because they stood in awe of the boy's father, a stern, hard old man, who was, for that place, rich, while she was only a poor orphan girl who toiled for her bread? And did you ever think that the pompous, well-to-do man, who always stops every morning and afternoon to buy a cluster of Mayflowers from this sad-eyed woman, is the very husband of her youth, who, by a long train of misfortunes and misunderstandings, was led to forsake his bride at the altar on the ground? Seizing a married to a wealthy Boston widow, whose two girl husbands the poor farmer's wife will never disturb, though she knows her husband well, while he never once has recognized in her the bride of his youth?

"Perhaps you may never have heard this sad tale—and a sadder record for truth, as well as a thread of possible bird-suits, forces from me the confession that I never heard it either; but the old Mayflower woman is there all the same and purposes well to do gentlemen do buy flowers of her; and it all may or the you know."—Rutland (Vt.) Herald.

Snakes in Connecticut.

Uncle Josh Peters, when he came in from a day's planting last evening, remarked that he actually believed he had killed more snakes than he had planted hills of corn. "I've been born and brought up in this 'ere town," he said, as he stood with his line over his shoulder talking to a row of his neighbors, "and I seen a heap of snakes in my time, but I never seen so many big blue-snakes, regular fighters, as I have this season. It beats all."

"How many have you seen to-day, Uncle Josh?"

"Well, now, I couldn't begin to count back and reckon on 'em up, but there must have been forty or fifty. Some of 'em were little fellows, but there were three black fellows as big as my wrist, and I should think pretty nigh six foot long, and they was lighting."

"Did they fight you?"

"Didn't give 'em a chance. If I had, they'd a made for my throat. They don't bite, but they choke a feller to death. I ain't much skeered of snakes if I can see 'em, but I don't want no more on hands of the black ones all of a sudden. I don't know what to make on't. Where do they all come from?"

From all parts of the town come reports that confirm Uncle Josh's experience. Connecticut seems to be covering with large and venomous snakes. There have been found a good many flat-heads and copper-colored adders, such on the Meridian Hill and in the northwestern part of the State there are discovered almost every season a few rattlesnakes; but there is no record of so many of the swift and light black reptiles having been seen and killed in any previous season.

The frost had hardly got out of the ground when its burrowings out of bridgeport, strolling in his native heat. Trumbull, discovered a nest of blacksnakes. They were three feet long, just coming out of their torpor, and were still sluggish. The young men killed forty-eight snakes in the nest. A servant named Peckham, who lives in that settlement in the Town of Lebanon, known as Beech Hill, began to clean out his well a few days ago. He came up in a hurry. He had seen half a dozen serpents' heads projecting from the stones that wall the well. How the reptiles got there he could not guess, for the well is six feet deep, and some distance from any stone fence. After a day's battle he drove out and killed fourteen. Every one was a blacksnake.

James Tyler, of North Ashton, a town near New Boston is the northeast corner of the State, came upon six snakes coiled in a bunch under a tree in his lot. He had neither stick nor stone, and precipitately pretended. Calling a little Scotland sprout to his course, and brought them down to the ground. The brave act was witnessed by Patrick Lynch, Esq., who determined that it should not go unrewarded. He therefore caused a handsome bronze medal to be struck off, upon which the deed was commemorated in lifting terms, and presented to Mr. Findley. THE GREAT BOAT RACE.

NEW YORK, June 16.

Elliott, who looked confident and cheerful, called out to several of his friends on the umpire's boat: "I will take time to one that I lead all the way." No response was made to the champion's offer. A few bets at six to four were made, however, on the non-pure's boat.

Hanlan came through High Level bridge, having embarked on the north side. He lifted his cap to his friends on the center. Meanwhile the referee's boat backed up to the starting point, and took its position. Renewed cheering took place. Both men took a preliminary spurt of a few minutes, and returned to the starting point. After three false starts were made, the men got away on equal terms, and a roll-call of "They're off!" "They're off!" At the third stroke Hanlan began to forge ahead of his competitor at a rapid rate, passing him steadily west of the stream, vessel does a sailing boat. Hanlan rowed thirty-nine strokes to the minute, Elliott a trifle slower. The latter was two lengths ahead in the first mile, when the men had reached the bend where Hanlan led by four lengths, and was giving Elliott the wash of his boat.

The shouting and yelling on the shore at this time was tremendous. Elliott to greater exertion, were deafening. Hanlan was evidently rowing a winning race, and Elliott was hugging the shore. At Eastwick gangway Hanlan, finding the race safe, reduced his stroke to thirty-two. Elliott, to the opposite, was rowing at thirty-five, and beginning to show evidences of rowing wildly. His steering was very faulty. Hanlan's steering was excellent. In passing Armstrong's Crane there was no other cause in the relative positions of the two men. The referee's boat was about a quarter of a mile behind, on the south of the island known as King's Meadows. Hanlan was now rowing thirty-two strokes and Elliott thirty-six, the former leading by five lengths. When off Benwell boat-house, a little beyond Paradise Quay, Hanlan stopped rowing for some seconds to look behind him the distance he had yet to row. This test of his rivalled in mind his having cut in last year before the place when he defeated Hawdon. About this time a death-like silence fell upon the multitude, except for England's champion had been defeated almost without effort by the Canadian oarsman. After sailing pleasantly on for some minutes, Hanlan turned to his oars again and began rowing with all his might to make up for lost time. Elliott's rowing was wild, and Elliott was seen furiously, and, amid deafening plaudits, Hanlan rowed under the Scotswood bridge, winning the race by ten lengths, and gaining the well-deserved title of champion of America and England.

After the race Hanlan, accompanied by Colonel Shaw and several Canadian supporters, returned to Newcastle, where he was cordially welcomed by a large concourse of people, in response to repeated calls Hanlan appeared at the window of the Newcastle Chronicle office and thanked the people very warmly for their kindness. He highly complimented Elliott for his invariable courtesy. Colonel Shaw also addressed the crowd. Both were loudly cheered.

In the evening, at a concert at Newcastle Town-hall, a splendid diamond ring was presented to Hanlan in account of a number of ladies and gentlemen of Newcastle.

Hanlan, who was received with cheers, said he had that day encountered one of the best scullers he ever met. Elliott said he was satisfied that no man in England could beat Hanlan. He (Elliott) would row any man the match, barring Hanlan, for £200 a side.

A match has been arranged between Elliott and Robert Boyd on the Tyne for £200 a side, to take place four months hence.

The Newcastle Leader, in a special editorial regarding the race, says: "Never before in British waters has such a performance as Hanlan's been seen. Elliott rowed in splendid form, but to no avail against the magnificent prowess of the young Canadian. Hanlan may fairly be described as a sculling phenomenon, and it will be a long time ere we look upon his like again.

Dr. G. W. LEITNER, a famous linguist, has just sent to the Civil and Military Gazette of India a translation of a narrative sent to him by an old servant of Sheer Ali, in which he gives a curious account of a Queen now reigning over a district near Heron. She is beautiful and brave enough to recall the classical Penthesilea. She is descended from the farfamed hero Rustam. Feramorz Khan, a General of Kalkrstan, once went to seize some of the camels of her country, but the Queen rode out on a superb horse to meet him and offered him single combat. The General retired without any combat. She is unmarried, and many Princes have sued for her hand in vain. Although a proficient in warlike arts, she cultivates the arts of peace, and her subjects are wealthy and happy.

IN Connecticut many of the largest factories are employing more men than for several years, and some are running over-time. There is a good demand for skilled labor at fair prices and good steady workmen are not found idle.

IT is greatly to the advantage of a brilliant man if he possesses common sense along with other accomplishments.—N. O. Picayune.

The Conkling-Lamar Personal Debate.

The Washington Associated Press dispatch of the 10th furnishes the following account of the warmly encounter, in the United States Senate on the night of the 18th, between Messrs. Conkling and Lamar:

Mr. Conkling then denounced the Army bill. After the time had come when the majority dare not adjourn the session and leave the Government to languish and starve, now when the whole battle has been fought, it is proposed by the scullies and jaggin of words to do what had failed as an open measure. The words "as a police force" were a mere cheat. The operative words were "to keep the peace at the polls." He was glad to accept the responsibility for any prosecuting, call it obstruction or anything else, to prevent the passage of such a bill without debate to show its real nature.

Mr. Conkling having charged the other side with bad faith in not allowing the time taken by the Mississippi and Louisiana bill this morning to be allowed in the debate on the Army bill, Mr. Lamar rose at the conclusion of Mr. Conkling's remarks, and said that so far as any imputation of bad faith to him was concerned he had [illegible] was two lengths ahead. In the first mile, when the men had reached the bend where Hanlan led by four lengths, and was giving Elliott the wash of his boat.

"The discussion of power to send for absent Senators was resumed.

"THE general trade in leather," says the Boston Advertiser, "shows an improvement, and for certain descriptions there has been a good demand. There is no speculative feeling in finished stock, but as manufacturers obtain orders for their goods they proceed so its disposition and temper may be modified by early treatment and training. Some persons, therefore, that young calves should be well fed and cared for, and they should be trained by kindness and familiarity for a future life of usefulness and docility. The young calf does not need full milk at all after the fourth day of its life, as soon as the dam's milk is fit for use in the dairy, the calf may be fed upon skimmed milk, warmed at first to the natural heat of the new milk. This is very important, as the cooling down of the calf's stomach by the drinking of several quarts of cold milk in a day is injurious and prevents growth. The calf should have warm milk for at least three months, and the work of warming the milk up to eighty degrees for a month longer will be amply repaid. During the latter two months of this training, it is well to begin to feed it grass and hay cut and mixed with a little meal, bran or middlings. These must be fed very cautiously, lest by over-liberality the stomach, incapable of perfectly digesting the novel food, should be disordered and a weakening diarrhea should result. When brought successfully up to this age, there is no difficulty in continuing the progressive

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Excellent Gingerbread.—Two cups of molasses, one cup of butter, four cups of flour, one cup of boiling water, with two teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in it, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, three eggs.

—The French cooks of New York City have hit on a new dish, which is simply the lobster broiled. The process of preparation is very simple. The fish is cut through the body, divided into equal parts while alive (this seems cruel, though it is not more cruel than boiling), the claws cracked on the edge, and put over the coals until the shell turns red. Then it is placed on the table, buttered, sprinkled with red pepper, and eaten.

—In building a chimney put a quantity of salt into the mortar with which the interstices of brick are to be laid. The effect will be that there will never be any accumulation of soot in that chimney. The philosophy is this stated: The salt in the portion of mortar which is exposed absorbs moisture from the atmosphere every damp day. The soot thus becoming damp falls down in the fireplace. This is an English discovery. It is used with success [illegible]

[illegible] cold water and parboil until tender. Split in two, lengthwise; take out a portion of the white, leaving the shell whole. Fry half a small onion in a little butter and when turning yellow add the inside of the egg plant chopped, a few bread crumbs, the yelk of an egg, and pepper and salt to taste. Set and cook for a second or two, then fill the egg plant shells with the mixture, brush the tops with beaten egg, dust with bread crumbs, make some incisions in the top and bake in the oven until nicely browned and tender.—Prairie Farmer.

—Canned Corn.—To every six quarts of corn take one ounce of tartaric acid, dissolved in boiling water; cut the corn from the cob, and put in sufficient water to cook; put the acid in while the corn is cooking; when done seal in glass cans; to prepare for the table, pour off the liquid and save it; put in enough fresh water to turn the corn to cook it; for every quart of corn add one teaspoonful of saleratus, and let it stand a few minutes before cooking; while cooking stir in a teaspoonful of sugar; if the corn turns yellow, too much saleratus has been used; pour back some of the sour water till it turns white again; season with salt, cream, butter and pepper, same as fresh corn.—Eastern Paper.

—The pruning of grape-vines in the summer is rarely attempted except by those who understand it, but it is a very useful practice. It keeps the vine within bounds, prevents much useless and weakly growth, and would otherwise divert the strength of the plant from the formation of fruit, and greatly improves the quality of the grapes. There is no danger in the methods. With a sharp pruning-knife (which has a curved blade) slash off by a quick stroke four inches of the shoots which are intended to bear fruit, leaving those intended to make wood to grow on. If fine fruit is desired, only one bunch should be left on each fruit or shoot branch; if abundance is desired more than quality, two clusters may be left. The ends of the shoots may be pinched off with the finger and thumb just as easily.—N. Y. Times.

Rearing of Calves.

The calf is the making of the cow. If the young calf is neglected and stinted, its constitution is weakened and its vigor in after life is diminished. If this is permitted, the value of the animal is seriously depreciated. "It is a poor rule which will not work both ways," and if a race of animals, as the Jersey, the Ayrshire, or the Short-horn breeds, for instance, have been so improved and developed by careful culture that ever is every respect different from its original stock from which the course of improvement started, it is equally reasonable to believe that as many may be reduced or degraded and impoverished by neglect. No other principle is so well established among farmers and stockgrowers as this, and in practical life upon the farm it should be made the rule for our guidance in the treatment of our young animals. It should also be remembered that while this is due physically, it is also true in other respects, and while the body of an animal may be developed so its disposition and temper may be modified by early treatment and training. Some persons, therefore, that young calves should be well fed and cared for, and they should be trained by kindness and familiarity for a future life of usefulness and docility. The young calf does not need full milk at all after the fourth day of its life, as soon as the dam's milk is fit for use in the dairy, the calf may be fed upon skimmed milk, warmed at first to the natural heat of the new milk. This is very important, as the cooling down of the calf's stomach by the drinking of several quarts of cold milk in a day is injurious and prevents growth. The calf should have warm milk for at least three months, and the work of warming the milk up to eighty degrees for a month longer will be amply repaid. During the latter two months of this training, it is well to begin to feed it grass and hay cut and mixed with a little meal, bran or middlings. These must be fed very cautiously, lest by over-liberality the stomach, incapable of perfectly digesting the novel food, should be disordered and a weakening diarrhea should result. When brought successfully up to this age, there is no difficulty in continuing the progressive treatment with satisfactory results up to the maturity of the calf, and it becomes a cow. This may happen at two years of age, and the earlier the young animal comes into profitable bearer. By cautious handling, kind treatment, and familiarizing her with her owners and the whole family, the young heifer is brought to the pail without trouble, and its habits, thus managed, kicking, self-sucking, and other disagreeable vices are never or hardly ever known, and if they should happen, they are cured without difficulty.—N. Y. Times.

Fifteen general managers of railways in the United States have salaries of from $10,000 to $15,000 per year.

England's Colonial possessions are an expensive luxury. The Zulu war has already cost $35,000,000, and Sir Garnet Wolseley says it is likely to cost at least $100,000,000 before they get through with it.

Democratic Secretary of State Shanklin of Indiana is credited with saying: "It isn't at all certain that we'll carry the State. The Democrats appear to be losing all over, and I tell you a clear ticket in 1880 we've got to pick up mightily from now on."

Thurlow Weed has begun the publication of a series of letters in the New York Tribune on the silver question. He believes that a great change has taken place in public sentiment on this matter, and that resumption will be a failure without silver.

Two hundred years ago next August, the first vessel passed through the Straits of Mackinac, that ever navigated its waters. She was commanded by Robert de la Salle, and constructed at what is now Erie, then Fort Frontenac. She was named the Griffin and was of 60 tons burden. Now 42,000 vessels, some of them of 2,000 tons burden, pass through the Straits annually.

As illustrative of the rapid decay of the Greenback movement in this State, the Greenback State Central Committee's effusive appeal to the Advocate in Michigan, asking contribution to aid the brethren in achieving a sweeping victory in Maine, has something to look Travellick, met with a response from 20 individuals out of the 73,000 fiat voter polled last fall.

Petroleum recently sold for 55 cents a barrel, the lowest price ever known in history for that commodity, and certainly an enormous distance below the rates of 1860, which were $20 a barrel. The fall is due mainly to the enormous production. In fact it is said that in many parts of the oil region crude petroleum is going to waste for want of storing facilities.

The Detroit Post and Tribune published last Saturday very extensive report from all parts of the State relative to the condition and prospect of the wheat crop, and also of other leading cereals, spring crops and fruit. For wheat, oats, barley, potatoes and fruit of all kinds except apples, the outlook is very promising. Corn prospects do not look so encouraging, and the yield of apples will be light.

Since the war 200,000 negroes have joined the Methodist Church.

General Grant does not favor the proposed "boom" in his behalf on his return to this country. A letter has been received from him, in Washington, written in Siam, in which he speaks of seeing in American papers references to political demonstrations in his honor on his arrival at San Francisco, and says any formal display would not be agreeable to him. His "head is level," as usual.

In a letter to a young man in New York, General Sherman attributes all the woes of the South to the infamous tradition of her brilliant minds. In the great and prosperous States, like New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, men are Americans. In less prominent and less prosperous States, like South Carolina, men are South Carolinians. What is precisely the fact of the matter.

The present situation in Maine indicates that there will be another three-cornered fight there this fall. The Greenbackers have renominated Mr. Smith, their candidate for Governor last fall. The Democrats are making an effort to put Governor Connor on the field again, and the Republicans will nominate a strong ticket. The Republicans now are fully informed as to the situation, and will make a strong effort to regain lost ground.

New York papers credit Michigan with the fact that twenty five votes of undelivered Republican rule has given her a credit which makes it impossible to redeem her bonds in advance of maturity. The difference between Republican and Democratic rule is this: Republican bonds cannot be bought, and Democrat bonds cannot be sold, except at a ruinous discount. If anybody doubts this, let him look back to the days of Buchanan's administration, when, after nearly half a century's uninterrupted Democratic rule, government bonds drawing right per cent. interest were sold for eighty eight cents on the dollar, and few capitalists want ed them at that. Now, after less than twenty years Republican rule, government bonds drawing only four per cent. interest, sell at par like hot cakes, notwithstanding the fact that the public debt has been materially increased in that time by four years of terrible war.

The President tried a constitutional potter at first. Failing to meet him half way in his patriotic purpose, the Democratic party of Southern secession sham now stands before the world in the attitude of one who has rejected the olive branch and prefers the sword. The President, tiring of the useless amusement of throwing tufts of grass at the irreconcilables, now hurls huge rocks at 'em, in the shape of vetoes, and they are gradually climbing down. Add his last veto passage is the best of the series. He flatly informs the Confederate Brigadiers and their Northern allies that he will not, if he can help it, permit Congress to tie his hands so that he cannot enforce existing laws which he has sworn to execute. The position of the President is so clearly right in the premises, that no man of ordinary sense or candor will attempt to allege it.

How do you like the looks of the NEW TIME this week?

QUARTERLY MEETING was held at Horton's Bay, Sunday.

Rev. A. P. Moore, of Traverse City, gave us a call on Saturday.

G. W. MILLER is erecting an addition to his house.

THE new Masonic hall will be ready for the plasterers to-morrow.

THE workmen have Mr. Inwood's Commercial House ready for the glass.

Rev. Prof. Brooks, of the Resort, occupied the M. E. pulpit Sunday morning.

BOYNE.—Dr. J. Sanderson and J. Smith of, of New York city, have located at Boyne.

CONTRACTOR Stickney writes that the dredge will surely be at work here before the 15th of this month.

H. B. HIRE, P. M., at Rock Elm, has resigned, and H. H. Thompson has been appointed in his place.

THERE is a movement on foot to secure the laying out of a State road from Banks, Antrim county, to Boyne Falls, in the county.

O. J. WOODARD, of Plainwell, Mich., have rented a part of the Ingalls residence, and, with his family, will spend the summer here.

A. FOX, of this place, has purchased Bunnell's half interest in the screw Hercules. She will freight for Fox the balance of the season.

WE wish to enquire why criminals who have been duly committed to jail by a Justice of the Peace, are permitted to be at large, and fed on roast beef and green apple pie.

L. O. L.—The Orange Lodges of this region, we understand, are to unite in a celebration in this village on the 12th of this month. It is expected that good speakers will address the gathering.

THE RESORT.—It has been decided by the Resort Association to put five dormer windows in the roof of their new boarding house, instead of three, which will give them seven more rooms than the original plans provided for.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—A meeting of the Baptist people was held Sunday at the residence of Crone & Dorman, which resulted in the organization of a church society of twenty four members. Rev. Mr. Parmenter was chosen pastor, and Geo. W. Bell was elected a prudential. H. D. Stevens, F. M. Dorman and M. F. Norton were chosen deacons. A committee was appointed to arrange for place of meeting.

Patent floor at Fox, Rice & Bowers.

Weekly or monthly time books at the postoffice newsstand.

TOWNSHIP.—Mr. Tilley, has opened a barber shop at the Fountain City House, and provided himself with all the appurtenances necessary for the comfort of his visitors. Mr. Riley gets over a fine shave as easy as any of them.

ACCIDENT.—Dr. Perrin reports to us that [illegible] Baker, a workman on the Resort carrying house fell between the joists on the lower floor, and put his shoulder out of joint, on Thursday. He lives in the Township of Wilson, and returned home.

MARINE.—The Clara Belle came over from Northport the 4th, and made a trip up Pine Lake. Among the excursionists were F. J. Meech and family, Norwood.

—The Fountain City and Idaho were both on time this week.

—Now in port; Moses Gage, Napoleon, Forest, Fleetwing, and Supply.

CRIMINAL.—The cases against Jones and sons, for assault and battery, last week, resulted in the conviction of the elder Jones and his son Daniel, the former paying a fine of $1.00 and costs, amounting in all to $19.09, and the latter $22.08. Wm. Jones was acquitted. In default of the payment of his fine, Daniel Jones was committed to jail.

D. C. NETTLETON, our enterprising wagon-maker, is out this week with a new advertisement. Mr. Nettleton was one of the early settlers of Charlevoix county, and one of the first to invest his money in Charlevoix; and if close identity with the interests of our county and village entitle any man here to the favor of his neighbors, Mr. Nettleton is the man. He has an excellent establishment of its kind, and, having the best of workmen, and superior facilities for manufacturing, he cannot fail to build up a fine trade.

DEATH OF CYRENIUS POWERS.—It is with sorrow that we announce the death of Cyrenius Powers, of Torch Lake, Antrim county. He went to Elk Rapids on Friday with a load of hay, and was returning, late at night, when his team took fright and ran away, throwing him violently from the wagon, causing injuries from the effects of which he died at nine o'clock Saturday morning. The news of Mr. Powers' death will be received at all points between Traverse City and Charlevoix, with sincere sorrow. He has during the past four years been the mail contractor on this route, and has by his regularity, good nature and accommodating disposition made many friends. Mr. Powers was about sixty years of age, and was a member in good standing of Torch Lake Lodge, F. & A. M., which organization will probably bury him with Masonic honors.

THE FOURTH.—The Immortal Fourth of July at Charlevoix came in like a lion and went out the same way. Even before the golden orb of day revealed himself above the eastern forests the patriotic farmers and their families commenced appearing on the streets, and not until the exuberant luminary disappeared below the distant horizon did our village, assume its normal state of quietude. The fire-cracker, the torpedo, and the all important lemonade, did their share nobly in making the day a success, and from morn until night we failed to see an unpleasant scene, or a drunken man. How many of our sister villages can say as much? The services at the Church passed off very satisfactorily, and the building was crowded to overflowing. The oration by Prof. Mayne was a credit to the orator, and was roundly applauded at its close. If this was Prof. Mayne's maiden effort in oratory he stood the ordeal with remarkable fortitude, and certainly acquitted himself well. The afternoon was spent by the crowd in witnessing the athletic games, rope-walk ing at the square, and in feats of skill of various kind, at the Park. Everybody was happy, as well as patriotic. It is generally conceded that the Charlevoix Centre Band, under the leadership of Mr. Scoresby, never did better than they did Friday.

Our New Type.

It is unnecessary for us to call the attention of our readers to the bright new appearance of our columns this week. We have at large expense to us, provided the SENTINEL with new type from the Philadelphia foundry of McKetters, Smith & Jordan, through their Western agent, S. P. Rounds, of Chicago. It is the best type in use and is such a decided improvement over the old type we have been using, that we think we are justified in feeling proud of the appearance of our paper. The new head, especially will attract attention. We hope the patrons of the SENTINEL will appreciate the efforts we are putting forth to make the SENTINEL a first class journal. We shall from time to time continue to add improvements.

THE CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS.—This magnificent new steamer made her appearance on Saturday, and a large crowd of Charlevoix people swarmed over her decks and through her beautiful rooms as soon as she was made fast at the dock. We copy the Traverse Bay Daily Eagle's description of her:

The dimensions of the hull, which is one of the finest models we ever saw is as follows: Length, 137 feet over all; breadth of beam, 27 feet 6 inches; depth of hold, 10 feet. She is very high and commodious between decks; being 8 feet in the clear. We have no room for a full description of how the hull is built and will only say that it is as strong and substantial as the best oak timber and iron could make it.

In the hold and on the main deck forward of the boiler and engine room there is a large amount of space devoted to freight.

The principal cabin is on the main deck aft the engine room, and is 70 feet long and 18 wide, nicely carpeted with Brussels carpet and furnished with two solid walnut sofas and a large quantity of parlor chairs, both sofas and chairs upholstered with fine leather. All the furniture is of solid walnut.

The upper cabin, which is used for the dining room, is 35 feet in length, and 18 feet wide, with a full length in the center. This cabin is furnished with new Brussels carpet, walnut chairs and tables, and is warmed, as is also the main cabin and in fact the entire boat, with nice manufactured steam radiators.

Over forward of the upper cabin, and also on the promenade deck is the pantry and kitchen.

There is also another smaller cabin on this deck, designed for a smoking and wash-room, which is admirably adapted for the purpose for which it is intended.

Just forward of the smoke-stack, on the promenade deck, are eight state rooms, very nicely finished, carpeted, and furnished with wide berths, woven wire bottoms, hair mattresses, neat and handsome bedding, and heavy damask curtains.

After all these rooms located upon the promenade deck, there still remains aft the dining room, a large, open space, about 40 feet long and the width of the boat, covered by the awning deck, and seated with chairs, lounges and settees. This, in fine weather, is the pleasantest part of the boat.

The hurricane deck is the entire length and width of the boat.

The whole boat, inside and out, is very nicely painted either white or in very light, pleasing, lively colors.

The machinery for propelling this boat is gotten up with special reference to safety and speed. The boiler is 16 feet long, and 8 feet in diameter, with 3 main flues and 132 three inch return tubes. The inside of the boiler is constructed of the very best Siligo iron. The shell is of Wyandott Eureka iron seven sixteenths of an inch thick, manufactured and rolled expressly for this boiler. All the seams are double rivited throughout. The steam driver is 10 inches in diameter and eight feet long. All the joints between the boiler and engine are of copper—no rubber packing is used. The boiler-room and smoke-stack are both enclosed with iron as an extra precaution against fire.

The engine is a low-pressure, or condensing one, 30x30 inches, built in the strongest and most substantial manner, with all the valves and fittings of the most approved modern patterns.

The steamer is officered as follows: Captain, Oscar F. Willett, late master of the Clara Belle. Capt. Willett has already become a favorite on the bay, and everybody who knows him agrees at his promotion. Mate, Hiram Kinney; Engineer, H. Johnson; Sam. Gerlaud, Clerk; Steward, Ed. Spikerman, whose parents live a few miles south of Charlevoix.

The City of Grand Rapids cost $27,000, quite a sum, to invest in a boat for Grand Traverse Bay, but in the hands of her enterprising owners and popular captain she will be the means, by her superior attractions of [illegible] of paying one. The present week she will run from Traverse City to Petoskey on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and back the alternate days.

ANOTHER VETO.

The Judicial Expenses Bill Vetoed—The President's Reasons Given in a Message to the House.

WASHINGTON June 23.

To the House of Representatives:

After a careful examination of the bill entitled "An Act making appropriations for certain Judicial Expenses," I return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with the following objections to its approval:

The general purpose of the bill is to provide for certain judicial expenses which accrue out for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and to that end the sum of $2,500,000 is appropriated. These appropriations are required to keep in operation the general functions of the Judicial Department of the Government, and if this part of the bill stood alone there would be no objection to its approval. It contains, however, other provisions to which I feel the respectful request their consideration.

At the present session, Congress has, in part, repealed the Statutes, framed by the Congressional Election Laws enacted in the interests of one party, and has formally passed a measure for that purpose as large as established Act making appropriations for the Legislative Executive and Judicial expenses. In this connection I refer to the veto message of June 20, last, and for other purposes." Unable to concur with Congress in that session, on the 17th of May last, I returned the bill with it to the House of Representatives, stating my objections to it, and inviting its consideration by that body, for that further consideration for which the Constitution provides.

On reconsideration the bill was approved by less than two-thirds of the House, and failed to become a law. The Election laws, therefore, remain valid enactments, and the appropriation of the bill is needed only when all private citizens, but also alike and equally binding upon all the executive officers of whose duties and responsibilities the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Departments of the Government are composed.

It is not sought by the bill before me to repeal the Election laws. Its object is to defeat their enforcement. The last clause of the first section is as follows:

"And no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person for services as special deputy marshal, or for expenses, either in the service of the process or otherwise, in attending the courts of the United States."

Title 26 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in the foregoing clause, relates to the duties of Marshals, and to the fees and emoluments they are entitled to receive for said duties.

Section 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the payment of the services and expenses of marshals, as well as of clerks, bailiffs and jurors in the courts of the United States, and for the payment of the services and expenses of commissioners, and of all persons employed by or under the authority of the Executive Departments of the United States, or any of them, in the service of the United States, shall be paid out of the moneys herein appropriated, and not otherwise; and the certificate of the Attorney-General shall be required in each case before the Auditor of the Treasury for the Department of Justice shall audit and allow any account for services rendered or expenses incurred in behalf of the United States.

This provision, the bill is intended to make an extensive and new and vital change in the existing laws. The Statutes of the United States, and the statutes on the same subject which are now in force:

Section 2,979. No department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Section 3,732. No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the estimates of the same service.

The object of these sections of the Revised Statutes is plain. It is, that, to prevent any money from being expended unless an appropriation has been made therefor, and to prevent the Government from being bound by a contract not previously authorized by law except for certain necessary purposes in the War and Navy Departments.

Under the existing law, the future of Congress to make the appropriations required for the execution of the provisions of the Election laws is not necessary to be enforced. The right and duty to appoint general and special Deputy Marshals, which they provide for, would still remain, and the Executive Department of the Government would also be empowered to incur the requisite liability for their compensation, but the second section of the bill contains a provision not known to any previous legislation. It absolutely withholds the power to make any executive and a dead letter during the next fiscal year. It sought to accomplish this end by omitting to appropriate the money by their enforcement, and to make it punishable by imprisonment for any officer of the Government in incurring any liability under any one provision of law or of the Revised Statutes, while making the appointment or payment of general or special Deputy Marshals for services on election days, and an appropriation not only does not repeal such laws, but does not even make.

The President is called upon to give his affirmative approval to a positive enactment which, if valid, would deprive him of the executive duty and power to see that the laws are faithfully executed. And no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person for services, either in the nature of the case or as expressly provided by law, except as specifically appropriated for by this act.

Section 2,709. No money shall be paid out of the Treasury unless in pursuance of an appropriation by law, nor unless it be in the warrant by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller, except as otherwise provided by law.

Section 3,679. No officer of the Government shall accept or hold any office under the Government of the United States or any agency thereof whose appointment or employment was prohibited by law at the time it was created or the salary or compensation thereof increased during the time for which he was appointed, or during the time such salary or compensation was increased; and every such appointment, employment, acceptance or holding shall be absolutely void, and no salary, compensation or emolument whatever shall be received for services rendered during the time aforesaid; and every person who shall accept or hold any office in violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and by imprisonment not exceeding one year.

The appointment of special Deputy Marshals is not made by the law, but by the head of one act of subsidiary to the person appointed to one or another of the offices to which power is accorded by the popular right of citizens to call into operation the civil and criminal laws for the benefit of persons in society, or even for having carried into execution a sentence of death.

Section 4,000 of the Revised Statutes puts it in the power of any two citizens of each city or town in each of the Marshal and the district the appointment of the two special Deputy Marshals. Thereupon the duties of the Marshal become imperative, and its non-performance will subject him to the penalty of removal from office, to criminal prosecution, or to removal from office by the President, as the circumstances of the case may require.

The bill now before me neither revokes the power of the citizens to appoint special Deputy Marshals of the duty imposed by law, nor the liability of the duty to see that the law is faithfully executed.

I hesitate to enter again upon any general discussion of the wisdom and necessity of the Election laws, or the dangerous and unconstitutional character of the bill, or the assertion that the power vested in Congress by the original Constitution to make or alter such regulations, is subject to control by the Executive to suppress any legislation which Congress may enact in relation to such laws under the penalty of refusing to make appropriations for the ordinary and essential functions of the Government. My views on these subjects have been fully presented in special messages sent by me to the House of Representatives during its present session.

What was said in those messages I regard as conclusive to my duty to respect in the bill before me. The arguments urged in those communications against a repeal of the Election laws have not weakened the right of Congress to withhold the Executive of that repeal from the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the Government, or to make the payment of money in excess of appropriations.

Section 2,732. No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the estimates of the same service.

The object of these sections of the Revised Statutes is plain. It is, that, to prevent any money from being expended unless an appropriation has been made therefor, and to prevent the Government from being bound by a contract not previously authorized by law except for certain necessary purposes in the War and Navy Departments.

Under the existing law, the future of Congress to make the appropriations required for the execution of the provisions of the Election laws is not necessary to be enforced. The right and duty to appoint general and special Deputy Marshals, which they provide for, would still remain, and the Executive Department of the Government would also be empowered to incur the requisite liability for their compensation, but the second section of the bill contains a provision not known to any previous legislation. It absolutely withholds the power to make any executive and a dead letter during the next fiscal year. It sought to accomplish this end by omitting to appropriate the money by their enforcement, and to make it punishable by imprisonment for any officer of the Government for incurring any liability under any one provision of law or of the Revised Statutes, while making the appointment or payment of general or special Deputy Marshals for services on election days, and an appropriation not only does not repeal such laws, but does not even make.

The President is called upon to give his affirmative approval to a positive enactment which, if valid, would deprive him of the executive duty and power to see that the laws are faithfully executed. And no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person for services, either in the nature of the case or as expressly provided by law, except as specifically appropriated for by this act.

Section 2,709. No money shall be paid out of the Treasury unless in pursuance of an appropriation by law, nor unless it be in the warrant by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller, except as otherwise provided by law.

Section 3,679. No officer of the Government shall accept or hold any office under the Government of the United States or any agency thereof whose appointment or employment was prohibited by law at the time it was created or the salary or compensation thereof increased during the time for which he was appointed, or during the time such salary or compensation was increased; and every such appointment, employment, acceptance or holding shall be absolutely void, and no salary, compensation or emolument whatever shall be received for services rendered during the time aforesaid; and every person who shall accept or hold any office in violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and by imprisonment not exceeding one year.

The appointment of special Deputy Marshals is not made by the law, but by the head of one act of subsidiary to the person appointed to one or another of the offices to which power is accorded by the popular right of citizens to call into operation the civil and criminal laws for the benefit of persons in society, or even for having carried into execution a sentence of death.

Section 4,000 of the Revised Statutes puts it in the power of any two citizens of each city or town in each of the Marshal and the district the appointment of the two special Deputy Marshals. Thereupon the duties of the Marshal become imperative, and its non-performance will subject him to the penalty of removal from office, to criminal prosecution or punishment

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JULY 8, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

NEW YORK, June 30, 1879.

The business of marketing for a great New York hotel is a matter which the ordinary mind can hardly grasp in its fullest extent. I was filled with astonishment when the proprietor of one of our caravansaries gave me an account of his duties connected with the feeding of the guests in his establishment. An average of three thousand people are furnished with food by him every day throughout the year. [illegible] The proprietor sets out to make his purchases at half-past six [illegible] he goes to Jefferson Market, where the trade is almost wholly confined to those [illegible] ments. Here everybody is hard at work, for most of the business must be done before eight o'clock. Eighteen sets of ribs, and twelve loins of beef are purchased, with the legs and shoulders of half a dozen Spring lambs and several sheep. Fulton Market is next visited, for fish. The fish stands extend along the whole of one side of the building, and every variety of fish in season can be found there in large quantities. There are tarfish, shad from the Connecticut River, brook-trout from Long Island, mackerel, sea bass, eels, blue fish, porgies, Spanish mackerel, pan fish, cels, lobsters, crabs, mussels, oysters, clams, salmon, haddock, and fifty other varieties, which I have not space to mention. The buyer selects sixty mackerel, about thirty sea bass, forty blue fish, thirty soles, sixty shad, one hundred lobsters and five hundred clams. Then a visit is paid to the berry department, where one woman, standing, small and delicate, does the largest berry business in the city. The buyer orders several hundred quarts of strawberries, and then goes to a large beef market in Fulton street, near New Church, where another large supply of meat is bespoken. To a little store in Washington street, just north of Vesey, the buyer goes for his daily supply of potatoes, carrots, turnips, onions, beets, parsley, cabbages, tomatoes, water-cresses, cucumbers, radishes, squashes, rhubarb, peas, asparagus, and other "garden truck," as the market men term it. In the basement of this store, oranges, lemons and limes are ordered by the box. In Washington market the buyer lays in his supply of smoked beef, smoked salmon, cheese, fifteen or twenty hams of fresh pork, half a dozen immense pieces of corned beef, and, finally, one hundred dollars worth of poultry. In Chambers street he stops for his supply of tea, coffee, spices and butter, three or four tubs of the latter being the usual amount purchased, as there is commonly a supply on hand. At about nine o'clock the marketing for the day is done. The cash payments made every day for articles of food by this one person are never under $600; and very frequently go beyond $800. Milk is purchased to the amount of $10,000 every year, and during the season it costs $200 a day to supply the wants of the lovers of oysters.

The Hull murder case, which was sent to agitated New York for two weeks, and which it was feared would prove an unsolvable mystery, has been explained, and the strange tension of public feeling on the subject relieved by the discovery and [illegible] of Rogers [illegible] in Boston. I speak of the strong and lasting interest in this particular case as strange, for murders here are by no means uncommon, nor was the victim in this instance remarkable, nor the circumstances peculiarly horrible. The intense sensation, and the fact that hundreds of columns of the print upon the subject, have found eager readers everywhere, are only explainable on the ground that the mystery of the affair was the secret of its horrible suggestion. The unspeakable fealture was the terrible one. The public cannot bear that. When this announcement of such a tragedy comes before them, accompanied by full details of its accomplishment and the criminals concerned, a comparatively slight interest is excited. But let a crime remain a puzzle to the police for forty-eight hours and popular uneasiness and horror is universal. Some one can really believe has been committed. Some one [illegible] and [illegible] to be one in untold [illegible] and [illegible] been let in upon the [illegible] secrets of [illegible] would have remained for years the dread of secret association.

Oddly and somewhat significantly, this case which so thoroughly baffled "the finest police &c." that the event proved every one of the theories upon which they were working to have been utterly wrong, was, as you are probably aware by this time, cleared up by a newspaper man, a reporter named Balch having spotted the murderer in the streets of Boston and caused his arrest. Mr. Balch, who did a similar service to society some time ago by securing the arrest of Winslow, the Boston forger, is very appropriately attached to the Boston Herald, the great New England paper which is to that whole region what the New York Herald is to this city—or even more, for its competition is much less. With its 100,000 circulation, its tireless enterprise, its cool headed political course and its reputation for absolute independence, the Boston Herald is the journalistic head of New England and exercises a rapidly increasing influence on national politics.

In support of New York's boast that [illegible] is the [illegible] [illegible] importance—be it batch, railroad, mine, or individual enterprise—is certain to have its New York office. Of late years, the large newspapers of the West have followed this general and convenient fashion, until there is now scarcely an American journal of national reputation which has not its regular metropolitan representative ready to transact all business on its behalf. Within a few months, indeed, the most important newspaper institution in the country outside of this city, namely, Kellogg's chain of Auxiliary Printing Houses, of Chicago, St. Louis and Cleveland, has yielded to this tendency toward centralization and establish an office here to facilitate the transaction of its immense and wide-spread business. How vast that business is may be judged from the fact that Mr. Kellogg prints regularly one-half of over seven hundred and fifty weekly newspapers, scattered from New York to Nebraska, and from Minnesota to Mississippi. He was the originator of the great system of "inside" printing in this country and has developed this curious and unique novel industry from absolutely nothing to a business of imposing proportions.

An interesting letter might be written about the history of this business centralization which has made New York a component portion of the whole nation, but I must await a more favorable opportunity to pursue the subject.

Astronomers tell us that although ignorant man has decreed that Summer shall commence on June 1st, that season, in fact, begins only with the solstice which has just passed. I judge from the actions of the thermometer that the astronomers have the best of it, for precious little Summer have we had until this week. Now, however, the dog days are very plainly upon us and the faces of the seaside hotel men which lengthened rapidly during the first three weeks of alleged Summer, have suddenly broadened into a smile of pleased benevolence. About the neighboring watering places and numerous recent improvements upon them which have been made this year I purpose writing in another letter.

RADIX.

Confederate Democratic Sentiment.

From the Okolona, Miss., Southern States, June 25.

As far as your Union is concerned, it is a lie.

As far as your constitution is concerned it is a falsehood.

As far as your flag is concerned, it is a beautiful and fragrant flower of corruption and unveracity.

OUR PLATFORM.

Democracy and Nothing but Democracy.

1. Wrench the [illegible] from the constitution and cast them into the lake that is said to burn with fire and brimstone.

2. Make the states the kings of this republic, and let the republic understand that it is nothing but a serf and a slave.

3. Vindicate the right of secession.

4. Make treason odious by making odious traitors like Grant and Seward.

5. Glorify the grand, immortal patriots like Jefferson Davis, Stuart, Barksdale and Lee.

6. Make free schools and all New England principles so-called, simply infamous.

7. The principal of a confederacy, the abstract right of secession; our labor system—all these will in the future stand forth among those things which human liberty has distilled.

8. Honor to Jefferson Davis—honor to the Southern Confederacy—honor to the bonny blue.

9. The south and southern principles must triumph or civilization must come to a standstill.

Through red hearts' blood, and plane of fire of burning cities; through death that crimsons as we with no sea; through [illegible] and gloom of which we may not speak we have marched to see these principles triumph, and by the living God we will never surrender them until we witness their supreme vindication.

Politic and Impolitic.

A clause in the new constitution of Louisiana provides for supplying wounded rebels with wooden legs and arms.

Ex-Congressman Landers is expected to succeed Blue Jean Williams as Democratic candidate for Governor of Indiana.

The Cincinnati Commercial calculates that the next census will take upward of 20 members of Congress from the south.

The Vicksburg Herald comforts the retired Jeff with the assurance that when he gets his pension there will be a big sum for interest added to it.

The Petersburg Appeal is bragging away at a couple of notable Virginia papers which advise against further observance of rebel memorial day.

It has been figured up that Boston would give Butler an increased vote this fall over last year, but that the rest of the state would show large decrease.

An unnaturalized Englishman, W. H. Hammet, served one term as member of Congress from Mississippi, from 1843 to 1845. Of course he was elected by Democratic votes.

Several Washington correspondents declare that Conkling was never so popular in Washington as since hauled the southern flag, Lamar, with unflinching front.

The Bangor Commercial loudly proclaims that the Democratic party of Maine is not dead, and consequently should not be buried in the verdant beds of Greenbackery.

The insult which Lamar, The Defender Of The South, bestowed upon Senator Conkling the other day, he had carefully written out, and when he pronounced them, he read the words slowly and deliberately.

Senator Voot blundered into calling the present august body, of which he is a member, the Confederate Senate, on Friday, and then tried to get out of it by saying that it would be better for the country if it were ruled by Confederates. Fortunately for Voot, he isn't obliged to make a fool of himself.

We have reason to believe that Lamar's insult to Senator Conkling was the result of a conspiracy of southern brigadiers, who had met in conclave, deliberated, and decided upon this line of conduct in the hope of inducing a personal recontre in the Senate Chamber, during which the life of Senator Conkling was to have been taken. The whole truth of this matter may be revealed yet, and then the plot will be exposed.—Washington National Republican.

Ready to Go.

From the Chicago InterOcean.

"Anything to get home," says the Democratic Congressman. The party would have given anything if it had never left home. "Fisherman's luck" don't begin to express the forlorn condition of the Democratic M. C's of Washington. History has recorded cases where people have run out of bread, and armies been forced to retreat because they were out of ammunition, but no history gives any account of a set of great men so bankrupt in everything as the present Democratic Congress. A badly whipped old rooster, slipping along the fence corners on a rainy day with head down and tail feathers dragging, looks like a lion by the side of these puny heroes who have heard the voice of the people, and feared to move in the dangerous work they had planned.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better state in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up in discouragement, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint is the direct cause of seventy five per cent of such maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the head, Palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale at Dr. G. W. Crosier's.

THE total sales of refunding certificates up to date amounted to $30,250,700, leaving but $12,749,300 to be disposed of.

A NEGRO named Chastine Cox was arrested in Boston on the 23d, charged with being the perpetrator of the mysterious murder of Mrs. Hull, of New York. He was formerly employed as private waiter at Mr. Hull's house. A portion of the jewelry stolen from the house at the time of the murder was found in a pawnshop in Boston, and Mrs. Hull's watch was found on his person. He made a full confession, saying that he entered the house on the night of the murder for the purpose of robbery only, and that he did not intend to kill her.

THE residence of J. F. Reynolds in Jonesboro, Ills., was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 23d, and Mr. Chandler and sister-in-law, young girls aged twelve and sixteen years, respectively, perished in the flames. Mrs. Reynolds was fatally burned.

A FEW days ago Professor Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., discovered a new comet in the constellation Perseus, right ascension [illegible] declination [illegible] north, moving a short fall, and is moving east of north at the rate of about one degree per day.

THE Secret Service branch of the Treasury Department has later been informed that a new counterfeit five-dollar head-binder note has been put in circulation in various parts of the country. It purports to be of the series of 1875, and bears the names of Allison, Register, and Wyman, Treasurer. It is executed on printed imitation fiber, which is lighter than the genuine. Experts pronounce it to be a dangerous counterfeit.

ACCORDING to a Frankfort (Ky.) dispatch of the 23d, a band of unknown men attacked the house of Samuel Faulkner, at Sand Rifle, seven miles distant, on the night of the 21st, and severely wounded him as he was escaping from the back door. They then set fire to the house, and it was burned to the ground. The inmates, Henry Russell, seventeen years old, and Faulkner's two daughters, aged twelve and three years, respectively, perished in the flames.

AT Pittsburg, Pa., on the 25th, Ralph Woods, seven years old, undertook to shoot a hen in the kitchen stove by pouring kerosene oil upon the hot embers. The inevitable explosion followed, and the burning oil was scattered in all directions, fatally burning Ralph, and slightly burning the infant brother.

A BUILER in an engine house attached to a saw and planing mill on Front street in Philadelphia exploded on the morning of the 27th, shattering to pieces the buildings and adjacent. One house was razed to the ground, so that a stranger would hardly conceive its previous existence, and in the ruins were buried a whole family. The engineer was instantly killed. A Mrs. McAvoy and her three children, and Claude and Stella Long, children of one of the tenants, were killed in the ruins of the house above mentioned. In one house an end of the exploded boiler shot through the brick wall and landed on the second floor, and so demolished everything that all evidence of habitation except the building itself was extinct.

On the 28th ult., the steamer May Queen, propelled by boiler while backing out from Rockwell's Island, in Lake Minnetonka, Minn. The boat was utterly destroyed. THE City of Baltimore, Md., was visited, on the 29th ult., by a terrible wind and rain storm, which deluged the principal streets and recorded between forty and fifty buildings near the Custom House and in the vicinity of the Maryland Institute.

A SEVENTY-FIVE-hour walk between Dan O'Leary, the Chicago pedestrian, and Peter Crossland, the English champion, was concluded at Chicago on the evening of the 30th ult., O'Leary proving the winner. Sunday Sickness.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Our dominie bear with regret, of an alderdish Sunday sickness in Charlevoix and vicinity these days.

The attacks are said to be most violent in the forepart of the day, usually diminishing the patient from attendance upon Divine service. They are pleased, however, to learn that some of this unfortunate class became so far revalescent in the afternoon of the day, as to be able to be in their pews in the evening. Whether any antidote to this periodical prostration is known to the esoteric section of the age, they have not learned, but ostensibly sympathize most sincerely and deeply with the sufferers. DESERVES.

Our American Sabbath.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

One of our mighty bulwarks of our civil government is the Christian Sabbath. Deprive us of its quiet and sanctity, and you would remove from this nation a conservative force which tends more than any other single institution to educate the public conscience and give to our common wealth its moral life. Nature as well as [illegible] for both man and beast a day of rest in every seven. The same law holds good in physics. Science has demonstrated that machinery needs rest. There is a tension and friction connected more or less with all machinery in constant use, that will occasion premature decay if not allowed periodical rest.

Those governments are the best, all things considered, that have the highest regard for the christian Sabbath. The intellectual and moral status of a community can be quite accurately determined by the manner in which it observes Sunday.

We therefore call upon all good citizens to aid, by their influence and example, in cultivating and maintaining a profound reverence for the Lord's day. We appeal to all members of churches and lodges to observe a deportment on that day, consistent with their solemn vows.

If we turn the Sabbath into a gala day, and in excursions and hilarity join the godly throng of the thoughtless and gay, we shall soon see the sad effects in a low tone of morals and in a stultified public conscience. "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord." He exhorted his people thus, "Come let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." The father of our country, George Washington, was regularly in his pew on the Sabbath day, although he had to go eight miles to meeting. He could not afford to set the example of neglecting the sanctuary on the Sabbath, much less to turn it into a day of recreation. We submit these few thoughts to the candid reader and lover of good order and morals.

CLERICUS.

Dated July 5, 1879.

Annie Louise Cary received $2400 per month during the last opera season.

Cotton yields, on an average, 800 pounds per acre; and tobacco 800 pounds of leaf per acre.

The Dowagiac Republican says that as high as 35 cents per pound has been paid for wool at that point. Very fair price these hard times.

The Saugatuck Commercial says the prospect of the peach crop is the best ever known in that region. R. M. Moore says he will have this year at least 15,000 baskets.

Congress adjourned last Tuesday, and has to-day fallen on the Democratic majority of the House perpetrated a gigantic swindle by passing a resolution giving to all annual employes of the House an extra months pay. A thirteen months pay for six months' work, and six month's vacation. This is Democratic economy. The Senate refused to pass a similar resolution for its employes. A number of Democratic Senators had good sense enough to denounce it as a swindle.

The Salt Lake Tribune says that the scene of the Mountain Meadow massacre is now the very picture of desolation. Before the Mormons murdered 137 innocent men, women and children there, in 1857, the meadows were known far and wide as a paradise in the desert, with an abundance of grass, crystal streams and ever-flowing springs. To-day the grass is gone, the water comes dried up, and nothing but a dreary waste marks the once beautiful spot. It is said that the earth is also sinking, and the bones which were collected after the massacre, though thrice buried, continue to reappear, while settlers in Lonesomity shun the spot as haunted.

Old Zach Chandler took the Senate by surprise last Monday afternoon. He made a ten minute speech, arraigning the Democratic part on an indictment of twelve separate counts. There was no business before the Senate, no bill under consideration, and any Senator could have stopped him by raising a point of order; but the Democrats were so dumfounded by Old Zach's vigorous onslaught that all listened with open mouths and speechless astonishment. When Mr. Chandler wants to state facts and declare his opinions, he does not wait for times and seasons, but proceeds without formality to unload his mind. And on this occasion, he did it in his usual emphatic style. We will endeavor to give his speech in full next week.

The Lansing Republican has been publishing a series of able editorial articles on "Paper Currency," in which it has on the one hand shown up the "shin" sophistries of the Greenbackers, and the dangers of unsecured and irredeemable paper issues, and on the other impudicy of Treasury banking or Government note issues, subject to political agitations and uncertainties. It sums up in the following conclusions respecting the national banking system:

1. That the National Banking system gives us a safe and flexible currency, well adapted to the wants of our people.

2. That it affords cheaper rates of exchange than any other system ever tried in this country.

3. That it affords our people a currency at all times convertible into legal-tender Government notes, and one which is always at par with greenbacks in every portion of our country.

4. That it is not a monopoly, but is a system of banking open to all alike.

5. That it is not only not burdensome to the people, but it indirectly makes the bonds taxable by National, State, and municipal authorities, and thus lightens the general burden of taxation.

6. That it would be impracticable, dangerous and corrupting to a terrible extent for the Government to monopolize the issues of paper currency, and shift them on the whims or schemes or demagogues demand.

If any one can present a system of banking with more good qualities than devised under Abraham Lincoln and approved by him, or one with as many good qualities and fewer imperfections, let him do so, but until that can be done, let us be content to "let well enough alone."

For Business or Pleasure --Its Excellencies.

The "Charlevoix Summer Resort"— A Brief History of It.

The Village of Charlevoix, situated on Lake Michigan, at the outlet of Round and Pine Lakes, and naturally the outlet and market of a large section of country lying north round and east, but during the past eight years developed slowly but substantially only as business men of means can be found in a two days journey from her limits. With the development of the excellent region of farming country of which we here speak must come a growth and importance for Charlevoix which will be lasting and stable.

The Village was unsurpassed last winter, and the present time for the season has even exceeded her most sanguine expectations. It has a commodious harbor, which is yearly being improved by the general government, and will have, within one month from this writing, a channel of at least twelve feet of water. Ultimately it will be one of the finest harbors on this shore of Lake Michigan.

The natural beauty of Charlevoix is unsurpassed. A well-known writer says:

"The surrounding scenery is romantic. The crystal water, the hills nestling in the midst of the picture, the forest falling away in the distance, form a grand and picturesque combined scene. One feels like returning again and yet again, to gaze upon this lovely vision. The hotels are good, and there $1.50 and $2.00 per day. Facilities for fishing are fine, and the fishing is most excellent. Mill Creek, one mile from the village, is a good trout stream, while in Pine Lake are any quantity of catchable fish, as also in Round. At Jordan, Deer and Bear Lakes, and Intermediate Lake may be reached from this point by 12 hours or 24 hours, which gives between Charlevoix and the head of Pine Lake."

The Summer Resort.

The Charlevoix Summer Resort, a map of which we publish on this page, is but a pleasant ten minutes' walk from the village, and is situated in one of the loveliest spots beneath the sun. The Association was organized in 1878, with the following officers:

President—H. W. Page, Kalamazoo.
Secretary—Samuel Brosler, " Treasurer—Kendall Brosler, "
Board of Directors—L. Schoenig, F. W. Wilcox, D. P. Weimer, W. Shores, S. A. Gilbert.

During the summer of 1878 ten cottages were erected, and a substantial pier, with fourteen feet of water at the front, was built, at which the steamboats running on Pine Lake always touch when they pass, so passengers to be landed or received. Other improvements were made, such as the building of a bath-house, and the sinking of a well from which is derived an abundant supply of delicious water, cold as ice. The amount expended in these improvements was $1,000. The number of persons who visited Charlevoix last summer because of the establishment of the resort, and who occupied the cottages or lived in tents, or found board in private families, and who considered the grounds of the resort as their headquarters, was considerable above one hundred. The number of members of the Association at present is twenty-three. All of these, who have not already built, have, with one or two exceptions, selected lots with the intention of building the coming season. Quite a number of others are expected to build as soon as the season weather approaches. It we may judge from the widespread interest which has been manifested in the enterprise, a great many will avail themselves of the opportunities for recreation and health which the resort furnishes. Without a single exception, those who visited the place last year have been enthusiastic in its praises, and the chairman of Charlevoix have formed in one topic of conversation ever since in a multitude of social circles. It is expected that a landing house will be erected on the grounds in the spring. As yet [illegible] have been built and Fleck, leaving as

DESTROYED BY LAVA.

Scenes on Mount Etna During the Recent Eruption Wholesale Destruction of Houses and Vineyards—Landed Proprietors Reduced to Beggary—A Sad and Terrible Scene.

The full accounts of the destruction caused by this terrible eruption of Mount Etna are heartrending. Catania was the richest of the provinces of Italy where there was a promise of a good harvest, but now the green fields and vineyards are buried under a heavy weight of hard, gray lava. The possessions of the Sicilians living on the sides or at the foot of the mountains are destroyed, and many a proprietor who in May was rich in June is as poor as the humblest of his servants. This story, only one of many, is told of a proprietor, the father of nine children, who yesterday saw everything he possessed, houses, barns, casas, olive trees, corn and wheat fields, and vineyards all destroyed. The inhabitants of the towns and country houses near the course of the lava are discouraged at the extent of their misfortunes. They remove all the household goods that can be transported, the cattle, the wine in the cellars, and even the tiles on the roofs of the houses. The roads near the advancing lava are like a battle-field. Wagons laden with goods, herds of cattle, crowds of weeping women and children are to be seen.

Innumerable strangers from every nation, on the contrary, go forward on the road and dwarfs so near the lava that the guards are obliged to send them back. Although they can advance as near as to light a cigar at the stream of lava, it is dangerous, as the lava, which at one moment looks dark and dull, is liable at the next to burst open by its own weight and make a new path for itself where it is not expected. Regiments of soldiers are stationed at once to keep order, and lines of them guard the edges of the stream. A correspondent from Randazzo describes how the inhabitants of that town and of Linguaglossa stood on the National road watching the lava slowly advance, and as it began to cover the road they sadly shook hands and said farewell when the fiery stream separated them. There was a cry of despair from the people at this point when the bridge of Piedmara was burned, and the lava fell from a little height into lovely vineyards and filled them up.

The mountain has been disturbed for five months. On the 22d of May the crater threw out with a great noise a vast quantity of black and smoking mud. This made an intermitting fountain rising sometimes twenty-four feet above the level of the soil. Occasionally great balls of mud, filled with gas, grew larger and larger until they burst. The river of mud, constantly fed from the crater, descended, the sides of the mountain, and for a distance of four miles filled up the canals used for irrigation. The frightened country people, unconscious of the worse ills that were coming upon them, sought in their terror fields from the entrance of the enemy by building walls of stone. On the afternoon of the 26th of May the eruption began, which is said to be the most violent of this century. The people were startled by violent and repeated shocks of earthquake, loud thunder, high wind and a heavy rain. Two new craters were then seen on the northwest part of the mountain, which vomited lava, smoke and fine ashes. The next day three columns of smoke were seen on the back of the mountain, and the lava began to descend. The movement of this incandescent stream was at first rapid, but as it increased in size and spread out over the lower parts of the mountain and the plains it became slower. Its advance is now estimated at forty-five feet an hour, and the widths of the three streams into which it is divided are variously estimated. That which threatens the town of Mojo, with two hundred inhabitants, and the River Alcantara is said to be fifteen hundred feet wide, and this width continually increases on account of the height of the stream. If the River Alcantara, which is one of the principal streams of Sicily and supplies several large towns, gardens and mills with water, is filled up, the calamity will be incalculable. The lava is already within a few hundred feet of the shore, and slowly advancing; but it is hoped that it may turn and run along the bank, or not have strength to reach the water, the violence of the eruption having diminished. One of the streams of lava has traveled a distance of thirteen miles from the crater. It is estimated that in less than four days more than two hundred and thirty million cubic yards of lava have been thrown out.

The spectacle of this tremendous convulsion of nature is wonderfully and fearfully beautiful. It is especially impressive at night, when the fiery torrent often throws up in its progress great masses of molten stone. The column of smoke and fine black sand which follows the lava reflects the red tint of the fire and looks like an aurora borealis. From the craters on the top of the mountain rise dense columns of smoke, now very white and again densely black, and often pierced by sharp streaks of electricity. The travelers who have flocked thither view these wonders with ecstasy, but the poor contadini and the rich man reduced to beggary weep over the ruin of their homes. In the daytime the cloud of smoke and sand is so dense that the sun is invisible, and the day seems to be almost like the night. Spectacles and smoke are necessary protections for whoever walks out in the neighborhood of the mountain, for the fine sand covers everything with a thick, heavy coating and draws into the eyes. The eruption is accompanied by constant, rumbling noises like the booming of artillery; the earth trembles, the sky is leaden. The mass of lava is from fifteen to thirty feet high, and, according to its height or the rate of day, varies in color from a bright, fiery red to a dull leaden shade. If it was not for the jets of smoke which issue now and then from this mass it might be thought dead lava of a half century ago, but when it moves its waves roll over each other and emit jets of fire.

Mount Etna is terrible in its wrath, but the Sicilians call it the Mongibello, or the "Beautiful Mountain." Not even its perished outburst can persuade them to forsake it. They cultivate its fertile slopes between the persists of eruption without seeming to fear the climax, certain destruction of their wealth. It is the highest volcano in Europe, and the lightest mountain, except the Alps, in Italy or Greece. Its height is 10,871 feet. It is divided into three regions, according to the zones of vegetation. The vineyards lie as high as thirty-nine hundred feet, then the forests of oak, chestnut and pine trees reach to six thousand feet. Above this point there is only sparse vegetation, as even the Alpine flowers cannot grow there among the smoke and cinders. Not more than twenty species of plants in all can exist in this desolate region. Among those are the broom, the wild plum and the delicate violet. No animals are found in this desert, horned by the sun above and the lava beneath, but in the fourteen forests that adorn the lower zone there are wolves, hares, rabbits, boars and porcupines. Hasty, records seventy-nine eruptions of this volcano, beginning in very ancient times. The most terrific of these was in A. D. 1669, when the Monti Rossi were formed and twenty-seven thousand persons were driven from their homes. The inhabitants of Catania expect an eruption about every ten years, the last, however, was in 1873.

The river of fire in the South, terrific and dramatic as it is, will not be so disastrous as the swelling of the rivers of water in the north. The immediate cause of the Po, the Tanaro, the Trano, the Mincio and other rivers, covers thousands of acres and destroys the last hope of a harvest in that part of the country. The Po was already very high when its many tributaries poured new floods into it, and the dykes were broken by the weight of the water. The inhabitants of a large district waited for several days in anguish, fearing not only for their property but for their lives. This rise of the Po is higher than that of 1873, and the ruin will be greater. The river is in a sea, and some places so high that only the topmost boughs of tall trees are seen.

Alexandria, Mantua, Asti and other towns have been under water, and the population in the county were in danger of losing their lives. Five hundred people were driven from their houses in Mantua and lodged in the Ducal Palace. The right bank of the Po here was broken for a distance of nine hundred feet. But the breach near Ferrara, which occurred in the night, was far more disastrous. The inhabitants fled from the valleys and took refuge on the banks of the Po. Here, with the courage of the soldiers and engineers, few deaths occurred where many might have been expected. The same day—the 26th of May—upon which occurred the eruption of Mount Etna, was marked by this inundation, said to be the most terrible remembered by the oldest inhabitants. The Po rushes along, carrying with it trees, houses, furniture or the dead bodies of animals surprised in their sleep by the flood.—Rome Cor. N. Y. Evening Post.

Novelties in Dresses.

Many of the fresh-looking and inexpensive striped fabrics introduced this season have their colors matched in the half transparent wool goods, which are as a class similar to the most delicate old-fashioned delaine. Such a combination as white gauze delaine and striped pale blue and white satin rays is exceedingly effective. A charming dress of pink batiste, trimmed with bands of the same, embroidered in the gayest colors, has a short train and a wide, pleated flounce, trimmed before plaiting with a three-inch band of the same embroidery. The fashion is "reversed or "Lavinia" overskirt has the uppermost piece finished on the edge with embroidery, also, and the back corresponding, is arranged in puffed drapery. Ribbons, comprising the colors of the needlework, are used for looping. A stylish dress of pink and blue plaid gingham has a short walking skirt, trimmed with a three-inch facing, fastened half way down and again near the top with two small pipings of blue blue linen. The overskirt, cut bias of the material, is raised high at one side by rows of shirring, the opposite side drooping toward the foot of the dress. Several puffs distend the drapery of the back breadth, and the overskirt is trimmed with wide lace, with a piping of blue linen for a finishing. The double basque has a vest and under basque of blue linen, the upper one having a garniture to match that upon the overskirt. Coat sleeves and a standing collar finish this graceful dress, to which is added a parasol matching the material and trimmed in correspondence with the toilet generally.

The newest bandana plaid dresses are combinations of plaid and percale, and are extremely gay. The daintiest are of patined, in miniature bouquet patterns with solid percale, which matches the olive or brown tint which is seen invariably in the foliage covering of the cotinet. The plain dark blues and wine colors are combined with plaids into which these dark colors enter, and are united with a great deal of gold color of different shades.

The paler materials, on the contrary, such as muslins and very light stone color, are combined with checks made up of pinks and blues, with lines of olive and brown or black. Dresses of unclenched sheeting, which have been for some time a rage abroad, have been adopted this season, and are trimmed with checked ginghams in those colors. Linens are trimmed with stripes or with narrow braids, which produce the same effect.

A charming innovation for garden party costumes consists of Madeira embroidery in the piece for overdresses. It is a yard wide and executed in buttonhole stripes, which prevent the bulky appearance that a needlework design covering the surface would otherwise possess. The trimming is made in scarf bands and narrow sath ribbon in one or more shades of color. It is prettiest when arranged as a princess dress, with a color under meath, and is very distinguished put in combination with the new chintz satteens. Costumes of a single color are by no means excluded, but a contrast is always introduced into the trimming. The pansy shades have reappeared, and peacock costumes are very fashionable, trimmed with a variety of peacock colored satin, finished with a darker shade of peacock. The bounet to accompany such a dress will be a leg horn, trimmed with a peacock feather, a shirred lining of peacock, satin and natural wheat.

With these charming dresses, which are made of satteen, satinet, percale, monie cloth and bandana plaids, ladies wear long-waisted thread gloves either plain or open narrow, or they wear silk gloves with narrow, gay ribbons run in and out through the open work on the wrists. Such gloves are long enough to cover the arm from the hand to the termination of the sleeve, which reaches far enough below the elbow to be suitable for outdoor use.

A striking picture of the summer fashions is the enormous amount of handsome lace and embroidery used in decoration. The Breton lace has become more popular than ever, and a few months than even its predecessor, torchon, although a great mistake is made in using Breton for many purposes for which torchon can be applied. Breton lace is pro-eminently adapted to such garments as are worn by the American foulard belle, but for underwear, and whatever involves hard usage or real service, torchon is infinitely better and more appropriate.

Needlework seems to have advanced a step and has in many places taken the previously held as a trimming for dresses and outside garments. No Alexandria, Mantua, Asti and other more is made this season for children, cambries, ginghams and all the superior classes of washing materials, as white needlework edgings and machine embroidered bands. The facility with which these can be procured, and the great reduction in prices have doubtless contributed to this end. The yard of needlework which formerly cost fifty cents can now be obtained for $2 the dozen yards, and of course a dozen are purchased where one was formerly.

Silks have never been more beautiful, and have rarely been so cheap, and the variety—multiplying every day. It seems almost perplexing instead of deciding the preference. The most attractive materials in the market at the present time are the American foulard silks. They are somewhat heavier than the French silks, more lustrous, are said to be more durable, and have the merit of washing as handsomely as a piece of linen. The favorite patterns are the syringed, in a dark color on a light ground; the polka dotted and the pekin. Very beautiful effects are shown in grounds of pearl color, cream white, pale gold and lavender, with fringes in navy, gendarme and peacock blue, seal brown, garnet, ruby and Bordeaux reds; cream white and yellow. Entirely new designs for summer wearing have been introduced among striped silks recently. In these the combinations of color are wheat color, blending in alternate stripes with chocolate brown, and dark blue stripes shading to light blue. These silks are for summer, and, therefore, are light, and the stripes are a scant inch in width. Merchants have introduced for summer dresses many fine qualities of woolens, which come under different names in different places and therefore confuse readers at a distance. Zephyrs, Panamas nainsook and tweeds and Jubilees are all light, fine and soft, and much employed for summer dresses. French and American buntings, cheviot cloths and woolen grenadines are especially intended for the seashore.—N. Y. Herald.

ACCORDING to the Biddeford (Me.) Union, the large cotton factories at that point are full of operatives, running on full time and presumably making fair profits. The machine shops and foundries are more of industry, employing full forces and turning out a large amount of machinery. The shoe factories were never doing a larger or more prosperous business than at the present time.

"In the Isthmus of Panama is cut by a canal," remarks a London journal. "English ships will assurelly reap a great, if not the greatest, share of advantage. It is said that as a consequence of the abominable climate, an Irishman rests under every sleeper of the Panama Railroad."

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

A return as to the religious persuasions of the non-commissioned officers and men of the British army shows that of a total of 74,852 men, 67,860 belong to the Church of England, 20,872 are Roman Catholics, 7,125 Presbyterians, and 3,985 are Protestants of other denominations.

—Dr. Morgan Dix, of Trinity Church, New York, in his "Manual of the Christian Life," warns churchmen not to attend the places of worship of other denominations en masse. "Go not at all," he says, "either to hear preaching out of curiosity nor to oblige friends. Keep to the Church alone. You have naught to do with those without the Church but to pray for them and treat them with kindness."

—At the Baltimore District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (colored), the question, "Does the use of fermented wine at the communion alienators with their congregations?" was decided in the negative by a vote of five to fifteen. The following resolution was also passed:

"That we believe the election of a man of African descent to the office of Bishop is the only way by which the Methodist Episcopal Church can convince the world that she is fully recognized as the equals of all others in said Methodist Episcopal Church."

—The fifty-fifth annual report of the American Sunday-School Union gives all the receipts were $81,137.19, and the expenditures $78,467.30, leaving a balance (appropriated, however,) of $17,669.89. The following tabulated statement, compiled from the records of the Association, shows at a glance the extent of its labor during the past year:

—The Rev. P. F. McSweeney, a Roman Catholic priest of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., recently offered to lease the school buildings and furniture which belonged to the Board of Education for ten years at the nominal sum of one dollar a year. The Board accepted the generous offer, and in return agreed "to open therein a public school, said school to be entirely under their control, the same as any other school." At the same time Mr. McSweeney made a private agreement to employ the Board of Education is to appoint only such teachers as the priest nominates. Of course, then, of twelve teachers, just twelve will be Romanists, six of whom are "sisters," to whom the priest furnishes a house as usual. These teachers teach the Roman Catholic catechism a half hour before the legal time of opening the afternoon session.—N. Y. Evening Post.

—A correspondent of the Methodist advises the use of water instead of wine at communions, and says: "The emphasis of the command which institutes the Lord's Supper is not on the pronoun 'this,' indicating the substances used, but on the verbs 'eat and drink,' and on the spiritual purpose designated by the phrase 'in remembrance of me.' The symbolic character of the Sacrament no more requires a particular kind of bread. The bread used in our time is not usually at least, perhaps never, the same in kind as that used by our Savior. He instituted the supper with the common drink of the country and time; whether it was a fermented wine does not concern our argument. Our common drink is water and not wine, and it is practically difficult for most churches to procure wine that is not adulterated. We should use water at the Lord's Supper with a good conscience."

The Success of Clairvoyants.

In a paper in the July Scribner on "The Delusions of Clairvoyance," Dr. George W. Beard, of New York, writes as follows:

The practical success of clairvoyants, public and private, is the result of these three factors: 1, guesswork; 2, shrewdness, to a science and an art; 2, coincidences, and 3, trickery.

Guessing is at once a science and an art—a science, because it may be regulated by certain principles. The famous "guessing game" illustrates what can be done by guessing scientifically carried out; with the privilege of four questions only, twenty chances, he may yet, beginning with the kingdom to which the article belongs, reason out the name object before his list is exhausted. Success in this game, as all who have played it know, depends much on practice. Clairvoyants develop their lives to the practice of this game, for they play it with every victim they meet.

The subject of coincidences is one that has excited far less attention among the students of ideology or of human nature than it deserves; little, indeed, has been written upon it. Among those who have given the subject any thought, the most erroneous impression prevails that it can be brought under the laws of pure mathematics. In the life of every active human being are frequent, almost daily occurring, coincidences, which those who give any attention to them may, if they choose, make the basis of most absurd delusions. Usually we give no more attention to these occurrences than an exclamation of surprise, and then forget all about them. We are talking of a person whom, perhaps, we rarely meet, and have not seen for a long time; suddenly he appears. A thought—out of the ordinary course, it may be—enters our mind; we express it, when behold! the same thought has just been passing through the mind of our friend. We meet with a certain experience, and then we remember, or fancy we remember, that the same experience has happened to us in a dream. Of all these daily and hourly happening coincidences, clairvoyants skillfully avail themselves, and in that direction they are aided by the ignorance and eagerness of their victims.

The trickery of clairvoyant pursuits mainly in the art of making their victims unconsciously reveal, by word or look, facts of personal history, and then, at the proper time, in re-imparting the information to them. In this way they gain the credit, even among persons of keen intellect, of being endowed with divine powers.

"Freckles."

"Your wife going to the country?" asked Green, as he met Brown on Woodward avenue yesterday.

"I guess not. I offered her fifty dollars to get ready, but she declares right up and down that she won't go."

"Have you worked the ill-health dodge?"

"Well, I tried to; but she has gained thirteen pounds since last January, and never looked better than now."

"Can't do it. She sleeps like a brick, and her nerves were never stronger."

"And she doesn't want to see her mother?"

"Her mother is dead."

"Digestion good?"

"Splendid. She eats everything, from a radish to limburger cheese, and I can't talk change of air to her."

Green fell to musing, and by and by continued:

"Mr. Brown, you have been a good friend to me."

"Well, I hope so."

"Yes, you have stood by me like a brother, and now I'll do you a favor. My wife left for her mother's yesterday, to be gone ten weeks. I tried every dodge I could think of, but she was bound to stay home. At last I hit it. She has freckles."

"Ah! So has mine!"

"Nothing but the country air in June will start freckles."

"You are right. Feels 'em right off in from four to eight weeks, leaving the complexion as fair as a baby's, and without injury to the most delicate eyebrows."

"You are ——"

"Mr. Green, I see it all. I shall never forget your kindness. In less than a week my freckled wife will be in Berrien County, and you and I will stay out till two o'clock in the morning, and then go to my house and cover the head with ice boots and oil. Mr. Green, Heaven bless you—shake! Any time you want a favor of me, you must only whistle, sigh and command."—Detroit Free Press.

Toledo Swords.

There is situated on the north bank of the Tagus, in Spain, a town which—and before Christ appeared upon the earth. Two thousand years ago it is supposed to have contained at least a quarter of a million of inhabitants, but to-day it is gloomy, silent and inert, giving shelter to perhaps a population of thirty thousand inhabitants. Its numerous churches and convents are mostly deserted, and the streets and walks are nearly destitute of people.

In the midst of the city rises a lofty cathedral, which was erected in the fourteenth century, and occupies the site of an ancient mosque. This edifice is the subject of much interest to travelers, and is quite unique. It was ransacked and plundered in 1521, and again in the year 1808, but previous to these events the interior was of the most magnificent character. There are connected with this cathedral an extraordinary number of chapels, of great interest from their splendid architectural beauty, their elaborate decorations, and their historic associations. Indeed, there are few cathedrals in Europe which afford the traveler more interest than this at Toledo.

The city was the capital of the Goths during their dominion, but about a thousand years ago came into the possession of the Moors, continuing in it and annexed to Castile. In the center of the plaza in the famous Zocodover, or market square, where the bull-fights have always taken place, and where heretics were publicly burned. The Fabrica de Armas, or manufactory of Toledo swords, is a huge rectangular edifice of comparatively modern construction, but the fame of the weapons made here existed in old Roman days. The knights of the crusades wore them, and their wonderful temper was tested on the flesh of Palestine by Cœur de Lion and his conquerors. The Toledo sword-blade is so carefully manufactured as the main-spring of a watch, and its elasticity is only to be compared to that delicate piece of mechanism.

It is curious that the sword should have become such a specialty in the manufacture of a city as to render it famous through all the exigencies of time, for a couple of thousand years more or less. Toledo sends forth her vaunted "blades" to-day, though there is far less demand for them than formerly.—N. Y. Weekly.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—An Ohio lady writes: "I agree with B. when she says that darning stockings and mending clothes are of more importance than fancy work, although I am not averse to fancy work, but I love to devote my time to darning, pulling the holes together, but make a lacework of them."

—Bright-green cardboard, almost without exception, contains arsenic. In a box of kinder-garten toys, recently examined, some slips of such card board for making letters were found to contain enough Schoele's green to have poisoned a small class. As the color may be readily removed by moisture, it is easy to see what dangerous playthings these might have proved to the children.—Exchange.

—Codfish Balls.—Two pounds boneless fish, soaked and boiled over night, with two pounds potatoes the next morning, and well-beaten before breakfast; boil twelve or fifteen good-sized potatoes; in the fall. The soil between the rows mash them very smooth with milk and is dug and pulverized, and banked up a large tablespoonful of butter; beat in the codfish; add one egg, if not soft enough, add a little more milk; make into a cake; brown in a spider. Three weeks' cooking of fish-cakes is to have the potato as fresh boiled, and beaten very lightly.

—Pigs drinking their fill of the first importance. More dangerous poisons are taken into the system with the water used, than in any other way. That from brooks is dangerous, as wash from manured fields and soakage from the soil flow into them. Water from deep wells, if not contaminated by sewage pipes or cesspools, is usually safe. Rain water is the purest of all, but is not always to be had. Much avoidable disease is due to impure water.—American Agriculturist.

—How to water horses. In cold weather give one pailful at a time, three times a day. This is enough unless you are working them regularly, then give a little more, but not to exceed four pailfuls a day. In warm weather when they are brought in, first sponge out the mouth and nostrils well with cold water. After a few spongings they will wait for it to be done. Then give them not to exceed a pailful apiece, and after feeling give one more pailful before you commence work. Don't let them go without long enough to make them want more than usual. If allowed, a thirsty horse, when warm, will drink too much. A common twelve quart pail is the size referred to above. Exchange.

—Cultivators adhere a long time to old practices, whether right or wrong. We have before us the result of an experiment, that if potatoes are planted at least five inches deep in such a mellow soil of earth as good farmers make, there is not only no necessity for hilling, but that it is absolutely detrimental and diminishes the product. OUR RADIX LETTER.

FOURTH SENTINEL.

New York, July 3, 1879.

The season at the seaside resorts opens this week. Large crowds have been making daily visits to Long Branch, Coney Island, Rockaway, etc. for several weeks, but the ball does not fairly get rolling before the first of July. By the time the "glorious Fourth" arrives the entire city, and all the towns in its vicinity, pour their inhabitants out into the popular resorts. Cars will overflowing are crowded to suffocation, prompting multitudes rush nervously about in search of rest and recreation, and by sundown on the Fourth, the great majority of excursionists are limp and exhausted. The man who "sees the fun of it" as much as those in the cars who remain quietly at home on the Fourth of July, and who reads his paper, smokes his cigar, drinks his julep, and eats his dinner in a comfortable manner while the rest of creation are hoarse about it as an endeavor to have a good time. Of all the places in the world to see life in a train, I commend not a Coney Island, from the West end, frequented by the commoner and a higher element of our city populations to the Pavilion which is the most respectable, shabby, easy, in fact every phase of life that can be imagined. Rockaway Island, until about three years ago, had a very bad name. Decent people would not go there. It was almost entirely given over to the depraved. It could only be reached by an unpleasant railway journey, with frequent changes from horse cars, or by boats packed with steam cars and women, who made things lively for the company until they disposed of the boats. The beach was reckoned then for three things, three card monte men, roast clams and surf bathing. The center and the eastern end of the Island was a dreary stretch of sand that way little frequented. During the Centennial summer a hotel at New York exhibition opened a hotel at the center of the Island, at a sufficient distance from the old establishments to give it an air of respectability. Its object was to provide a hotel that would not only satisfy the wants of excursionists but would afford attractions to people who wished to pay something more than a passing visit to Coney Island Beach, which is noted as being one of the finest in the world. Luck's was successful, and his example was immediately followed by other enterprising parties, who formed a company and purchased a large tract of sand, upon which they erected the Manhattan Beach Hotel, two lines of railroad were built to connect the hotel with New York. Manhattan Beach was immediately followed by Brighton Beach, and its hotel, situated a little east of Caffell's. Then the eyes of the inhabitants of New York on the surrounding country were opened to the fact that there beside them was a splendid seaside resort that could be comfortably reached in about one hour and thirty minutes, at an expense of fifty cents, including the return trip. People did not fully appreciate the new order of things until last summer. Then they went to the extreme, as Americans generally do. They made a continual rush for Coney Island, depriving themselves of sleep and comfort to accomplish their aim. They managed to get to Coney Island, and were pleased with the weather and tickled with the straw of Coney Island in every way, shape and manner. I suppose I shall do as every one else does to-day, that is go to Manhattan Beach to see the fireworks and the big balloon, eat a dinner that will not taste as sweet as at any first class restaurant in town; hear lazy twanging like horse-fiddlings for hyenas only else to catalling; take a drink of Orange cider spring; or Tucker soda; call it in his Plymouth Rock advertisements, and return to my comfortable home to night, dusty, hot, dusty and tired out. Coney Island is a very good thing in its way, and it should be visited by everyone who comes to New York during the heat of term. But in the name of all that is sensible, take it in moderation. Don't try to do it all in two, three, or four hours, just because it is near New York. Most of the hotels at the Island are already full of guests, and to night their restaurants are packed with excursionists. The little narrow railroad between the Brighton and Manhattan Beach is in good running order, and runs to from $1000 to $2000 a day. Rumor has it that it cost $2,500,000 to construct and equip it. The fare required is passage from one hotel to the other only, while the fare to and from the city is half a minute, but its great advantage is that it has direct access to all the beaches. The effect attained on it at the Island to-night will be the fireworks. The pyrotechnic display, as the men in charge of the fireworks call it, is to consist of a balloon to be given through the season. James Pain, Pyrotechnist to the Alexandra Palace, London, has been engaged to direct the entertainments. There will be an illuminated French view of the Manhattan Beach Hotel, with the words, "Success to Manhattan Beach," this effect will be seventy-five feet in length and fifty in width. Then there will be a representation of Niagara Falls by a stream of golden fire, the entire design being sixty feet high and seventy feet wide. There will be a fiery fountain, in which streams of molten gold and silver will be thrown up to a height of forty feet. There will be a two-foot shell fifty feet in diameter which in exploding will throw out the most brilliant colors. An Alaska dog team will spring up, magnesium balloons will dart in the air, shells that will burst and scatter many colored fires will be thrown up 100 and 200 feet, spreading their coruscations over an area of space, and finally the exhibition will close in a blaze of glory from the light of one hundred rockets set off simultaneously. That's the way they do things at Manhattan Beach. The new one place in front of Cable's is a great success. It was open to the public on Tuesday last. Six steamboats landthere every day. No ship-sailors are experienced from the surf, on account of the great length of the pier. On the pier there are 1,200 bathrooms, without any landing directly to the water, and there will be made on a liberal scale, the Seventh Regiment band, with Gilmore at its head, having been engaged. The capitalists who have put their money in this place are looking for large returns. The letting of the restaurant and other privileges will bring in about $60,000 this season. The 1,200 bath rooms will produce $60,000, and ten cents for every passenger landed on the pier, will, it is estimated, pay the owners $5,000 a day. Stock of the pier has recently sold at auction in this city for 15%, at private sales it has brought 18%, while some of it could not be bought for $500. The Coney Island pier is about one thousand feet long. It will be a much desirable resort on a holiday, when the breeze is off the land. Its entire length will be gayly decorated with flags to-day, and it illuminated by hundreds of lamps by night. Comfortable chairs will be found at all points, so that the thousands of pleasure seekers can sit easily and comfortably in the breeze, hear the roar of the sea, mingled with the music by the house band, and sip their champagne or beer, that they have their meals with ease. Coney Island does choose. The usual officers will see that the picnic conducts itself in a quiet and orderly manner. You can land from one of the six steamers that run daily in the year, and without seeing foot on land, enjoy all the pleasures that are reasonable being easily secured. Food, drink, music, the flutter of gay dresses, tobacco smoke and surf bathing. To get at the latter you have only to descend a flight of steps from the pier, and there you are, like a piece of cork, floating in the brine.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of canons, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can bathe in the sea when in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up thinking that it will bring on a cold or with disease, when there is no occasion for the feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them so free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and liver complaint is the direct cause of seventy five per cent. of such maladies as Sick Headache, Constipation, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the head, Palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effects. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale at Dr. G. W. Crosby's.

A Washington dispatch of the 4th says that on the $40,000,000 Government-refunding certificates issued $27,100 00 had been exchanged for 5-per-cents. bonds. There still remained outstanding some $12,-893,000. This large amount still outstanding induced the belief that a much larger proportion had come into the hands of small investors than had really been supposed.

The Chicago Tribune publishes an account of a recent interview had by a correspondent of that paper with Sitting Bull, to which the noted Indian Chief said he only went to war with the whites to defend his women and children, and all he wants now is to be let alone and allowed to hunt. He would never consent to go on a reservation and become a farmer. Other leading Sioux Indians expressed similar views.

VIOLENT storms of wind and rain visited portions of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Dakota and Iowa, on the night of the 30 and morning of the 31, by which much damage was done to building and other property, and several lives were lost. The Town of Vass, near Red Wing, Minn., was one of the severest sufferers, the Orphan Asylum in that place being blown down and three of the inmates being killed and seventeen others injured. Other buildings were destroyed, and nine lives were lost in the town, and four other persons were, it was thought, fatally, and about thirty more or less seriously injured. The storm was one of the worst in the line of disasters connected with the storm was about twenty.

It was announced that the feat would be repeated on the 4th. Over 30,000 people came over either to witness it, but Pepu could not withstand the influences of the day and became gloriously drunk, and his friends would not allow him to jump.

On the afternoon of the 4th, at Lake Quinsigamond, near Worcester, Mass., the steamer Isaac Davis returning from a trip, was boarded by an immense crowd just as she reached the landing-place, and in the rush those on board could be discharged. Personal and Political.

THE President, on the 30th ult., sent the following message to Congress, stating that body that no appropriations for Marshals' expenses had yet been made:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The bill making appropriations for the payment of fees of United States Marshals and their deputies, which was presented to me by the Secretary of the House of Representatives on the 19th instant, contains no provision for paying on its recommendation by the Attorney-General the expenses of Marshals and Deputy Marshals of the United States in the several districts, which have been incurred since the last appropriation for those purposes was made by law. The omission to make such provision will, I am informed by the Attorney-General, embarrass the administration of justice in the courts of the United States, and I therefore return the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my signature withheld from it, in order that the omission may be supplied.

XLVI. Congress—Extra Session.

IN the Senate on the 30th ult., Mr. Voorhees, Democrat, and Mr. Allison's resolution to refer it to the Finance Committee was agreed to by 32 to 24—as follows:

YEAS—Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Cameron (Wis.), Carpenter, Chaffee, Conkling, Dawes, Ferry, Hill (Col.), Kellogg, Kernan, Kirkwood, Maxey, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Sargent, Saunders, Windom—24.

Wallace, Dorsey, Thurman (Ohio), who would have voted nay, if consistent with their votes on the Senatorial question. Messrs. Bailey and Bayard announced that had they been present they would have voted yes on the resolution. Messrs. McMillan and Gowan announced that they would have voted in the negative if a vote report was made on the House joint resolution for adjournment. Mr. Blaine, Mr. Windom and Mr. Dorsey stated in this connection. The House resolution was then passed, and relating to the exemption of certain articles from taxation, the House was slightly amended, and agreed to. Mr. Windom introduced the Marshals' Appropriation Bill, and after explaining its provisions the political clauses of the original bill which caused the veto were left out. The bill was then unanimously passed, as was also a similar resolution relative to the Deputy Marshals of the important duties imposed upon them, which message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. After transacting the business of the session of an appropriation for the pay of United States Marshals and their deputies the Democratic Senators holding the President responsible for the failure of the last session, by unduly prolonging their duties, and refusing to enact the necessary legislation, thereby rendering thanks to Mr. Thurman for "the high dignity and impartiality with which he discharged the duties of the Chair," while serving as President pro tem., was unanimously passed, as was also a similar resolution relative to Vice-President Wheeler. A committee appointed for that purpose having waited on the President and reported that he had no further communication to make to Congress, at five o'clock the Presidential Proclamation, declaring the session of the Senate adjourned sine die. In the House the amendment of the Senate fixing the hour of adjournment at five o'clock was concurred in. A conference report on the joint resolution relative to the joint committee clerks, etc., was agreed to. Mr. Herndon was appointed on the committee in regard to the Centennial election, in place of Mr. Randall, declined. The hour of five o'clock having arrived, and word having been received from the President that he had no further communication to make to Congress, a few words of thanks, declared the House adjourned without day.

Fireman Jones' Feat.

A feat often related of Edward Grier, the Pennsylvania Railroad engineer, whose death has just been reported, was accomplished on Monday by Charles Jones, a fireman on the engine which takes the night mail from Hicksville Railroad to Greenport, on Long Island Railroad. The train was nearing the Jamaica station, and the fireman, engineer and the fireman was out on the platform by the boiler, oiling the machinery, when the engineer espied a train of cars standing ahead. The fireman looked up and saw a child lying between the tracks, down the line of the platform and the engine. While there were a number of people visible on the station-platform, but none of them appeared to see the child, the engineer reversed his engine, but the grade was steep, and there was no chance of stopping the train in time. Striking his mouth away, the fireman swung himself down upon the cylinder and around the head-light and slid down the pilot, holding on by the coupling-irons. Leaving his left foot between the bars of the pilot, he kneeled on his right knee. The train came down upon them, and Jones, who is very motherless. Jones thinks it was asleep. Holding and bracing himself with his left leg and hand, and clutching the child's clothing as the engine was upon it, he swung the little creature forward and up and out of the way. It was not, but hurtin any way, and just awake, a bright, curly-haired little boy, perhaps three years old, and weighing scarcely twenty pounds. The fireman shouldered and held him till the engineer, coming out of the cab, received him as the engine came to a stop. Then fireman Jones clambered back and betook himself to the tender and to his shovel.

When the train reached the station the passengers who had seen the danger, but not the rescue, swarmed out to hear about it and to cheer Jones and to shake hands with him. Nobody at the station knew to whom the child belonged, and it was left in charge of the agent. It did not begin to cry till it was put down from the locomotive. —N. Y. World.

ANOTHER APPROPRIATION BILL VETOED.

The President Refuses to Sign the Bill Making Appropriations for the Fees of United States Marshals—The Veto Message.

WASHINGTON, June 23.

The following is the text of the Veto Message received by the House from the President to-day:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An Act making appropriations for the fees of United States Marshals and their general Deputies," with the following objections to its becoming a law:

The bill appropriates the sum of $600,000 for the service, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, of United States Marshals and their general Deputies. The House has provided for all sums essential to the faithful execution of the laws. They were created and their powers and duties defined by Congress in the first session after the adoption of the Constitution by the Judiciary act which was approved September 24, 1789. The general duties, as defined in the act which originally established the office, substantially the same as those described in the statutes now in force. The further provisions of the law subject to the legislative control are as follows:

SEC. 783. It shall be the duty of the Marshal of each district to attend the District and Circuit Courts when sitting therein, and to execute all lawful orders issued to him by any of the said courts, or by any judge thereof, in pursuance of law.

SEC. 784. The Marshals and their Deputies shall have the same powers in executing the laws of the United States as sheriffs and their deputies during the usual hours for service have in executing the laws of their respective States.

SEC. 785. Such additional duties have been from time to time imposed upon the Marshals and their deputies, the due and regular performance of which are required for the support of almost every branch of public service. Without these officers there would be no means of executing warrants, of conducting the processes of the courts, and the judicial system of the country would be practically defunct.

The criminal jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is very extensive. Those committed within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States are numerously defined in the Revised Statutes to the following forms:

SEC. 5339. Murder, manslaughter, rape, assault and battery with intent to kill, and assaulting, beating or wounding, are punishable by fine and imprisonment, or by either, according to the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

SEC. 5346. Every person who, within the United States, knowingly and willfully obstructs, resists or opposes any officer of the United States in serving or attempting to serve or execute any mesne process or warrant, or any rule or order of any court of the United States, or any other legal or judicial writ or process, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment not more than one year, or by both.

SEC. 5347. Every person who, within the United States, knowingly and willfully resists or prevents the execution of any decree of any court of the United States, or rescues or attempts to rescue any property, person or vessel, after the same has been seized by any officer under the process of any court of the United States, or after the same has been committed by any judge or court of the United States, or after the same has been delivered by the order of such judge or court to any keeper or other person to be kept, pending the proceedings in court, or after the decree, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—It is said that the milk from Alpine dairy farms differs from other good milk merely because it contains a high percentage of sugar of milk, and because it possesses a peculiar flavor, derived from the aromatic plants on which the animals feed.

—The London bankers are now using an electrical machine for the detection of bad or light gold coins. A stream of coins is gently shaken down a brass plate, and down by one they fall upon a tossing bar so delicately adjusted that a slight deficiency will set an apparatus in motion which jerks the bad coins out at a side escape-hole, while the good ones pass into another receptacle. The invention saves a good deal of time and is correct to the minutest point, and the royalty of two hundred dollars a year which the inventor gets for using a machine is not considered exorbitant.

The famous Egyptian obelisk which was recently set up on the banks of the Thames, and which, it was found, would rapidly become disorganized by the action of the peculiar London atmosphere, has been covered with a silicious wash, which, it is believed, will successfully protect its surface for years. The effect of the process, it is said, has surpassed expectation, and is only to be compared to the restoration of an old painting. The granite has taken on a fresh appearance, and is just chiseled from the rock, showing its original colors, the quartz and feldspar glittering as though covered by the sun. It also comes out much more distinctly than before.

Pittsburgh is one of the blackest of cities, by reason of the smoke from its manufactories; but a plan is being tested that promises to make it clean. The proposition is to wash the smoke, and the way of doing it is thus described: "The washing is done by passing the smoke through three spray caused by paddle wheels revolving in a tank of water 8 feet long each 30 inches wide. The tank and wheels are placed in a flue, between the furnace and the chimney, and, the wheels being made to revolve in the direction of the flow of the smoke, the latter is increased. The smoke, after being thus treated, will not soil a white handkerchief.

A new invention has been patented in Germany which, should its practical application prove feasible, will add very great value to the paper industry. The invention consists of an apparatus, described as very simple in design and construction, by which an ordinary writing-pen, resembling rifle can, whenever it may be desired, be temporarily converted into a repeating arm. The supply of ink for writing purposes and can be carried by the soldier in his pocket. When necessary it can be fitted on the rifle in a moment, when ten rounds can be fired just as readily as the same number of cartridges can be discharged from any rifle.

—An other process has been devised, by a London manufacturer, for producing a paper for checks, bank-notes, deeds, law documents, etc., that will be proof against alterations by the use of chemicals, including acids and cyanide of potassium. For this purpose, he mixes with the paper pulp, or passes the manufactured paper through, an alkaline solution of peroxide of iron—or any salt of peroxide of iron—and ferrocyanide of potassium or other base, in which the iron is kept from precipitating by the addition to the solution of tartaric acid, citric acid, sugar tartrates or citrates, or other organic substances having the power of preventing the precipitation of oxide of iron by an alkali. Upon the application of a chemical to paper manufactured or treated according to this particular system, a color or stain will be produced, whether the chemical be applied over ink or not.—*N. Y. Lighter than thistle down,
Lighter than dandelion's golden cloud,
Breathed from the blossoming lily's golden cup—
Those lilies here around me
Oft in the summer of years ago,
Ah! such a dream my memory stirred.
But sharp, as sharper than a two-edged sword
To pierce and stung and sear.
The heart whose peace a breath of blame could mar.

Only a word, a little word that fell
Unheeded as the dew
That from the darkling blue
Of summer midnight softly steals, to tell
Its tale of singing brook and starlit hill
To yonder redstone shrine,
Where, pale with dust and heat,
The little wayside flower or sunbeam's self
Uplifts to greet the day it knows so well:
But oh, its touch could life's best hope renew.

A SKETCH IN A NARROW STREET.

It was so narrow, this little back street in the quaint, old-fashioned German town, that Hans Gottlieb could, if he had so wished, have shaken hands from out of his window with his opposite neighbor.

The sun that shone so bravely elsewhere was seldom visible here; only in the early morning, when the glad rays found their way in, and gave faint encouragement to the two or three flowers that blossomed in pots on the window-sill.

On such occasions Hans would pause in his work, knowing full well what was coming—how the casement opposite would be flung open and a girl's voice, singing a blithe little French song, would ring across the silent street to his listening ears; how a slim, pretty figure would for a moment stand framed in the surrounding scarlet runners, a pretty figure, with dark, clustering curls, and black hair, drawn up under a white cap, a beautiful contrast, as Hans thought in his comely, yellow-haired countrywoman. As soon as this vision appeared Hans would pause in his work and turn his eyes toward it, would wait till the watering of the flowers and the singing of the song were alike ended, and then would approach his fellow-craftsman, and in his own quaint, old-fashioned German say such a thing as:

"Good morning," his neighbor would call across, in that pretty foreign German that was enchanting in its ears—"Good morning, Monsieur Gottlieb," and then with a nod and a smile the trim little figure would vanish into the dark shadows, and Hans return to his work.

But though life was too busy with those two for much idle gossip, there was to win, even when one worked hard for it, so that neither could afford to talk all day, the minutes to talk, yet Hans, as he worked, dreaming of long days when stone-carving should not mean daily bread, but honour and glory to those he loved, he was constantly possessions all the time of a dark head bent over a table drawn close up to the window opposite—a head, a face covered with many bright-colored scraps of muslin and paper—which in due course, under those deft, small hands, became summer flowers; and at this part dreaming seeming to the looker-on the spoils of a June garden.

Then they worked day after day those two, so near together, yet so far apart, abstaining from all conversation which might have made the days pass more quickly; but then an hour's idleness might mean going supperless to bed, so that even Rose Cordier, dearly as she loved thatsound on her own voice, refrained from making use of it, except for an occasional song. But when the day was over, when the coolness in the little close street, and the shadowy gray of the strip of sky overhead, gave notice that the long summer day was drawing to an end, and the shadows of twilight would begin to fall, then Rose would rise and open the door, to interchange greetings and gossip with the neighbors—with the women sitting on their doorsteps, knitting in the peaceful twilight, their children playing about them; with the fellow-workers returning from their work; with the young men loitering about smoking, for Rose had always a bright word and look for every man, woman and child she knew.

And they were all fond of her—of this little foreigner who had come among them four years ago with an old mother, since dead, and who earned her daily bread honestly among them.

Then as it grew even darker, Hans Gottlieb would become aware that the day and its work were over, and would lay aside his chisel, and also seek what little fresh air there was at the door of his dwelling. He did not laugh or gossip with his neighbors, as did Rose Cordier; it was not his way, and the fact was quite recognized by the dwellers in William street. Beyond a "Good evening, neighbor," they did not seek to disturb him in the enjoyment of his evening pipe, only occasionally Rose would step across and ask him what he was at work upon, or if he had a good order, and then poor Hans, hating all over his face, would proceed to describe his work, his prospects, until Rose, with a pretty shrug at her shoulders, would tell him in her foreign German she could not understand him; he must speak slower, much slower; it was too late now, but to-morrow, yes to-morrow, he must try and explain it all again, for it was interesting, so interesting. But for now it must be good-night, "good-night to every one, and the slight, trim figure had disappeared, and the door was closed.

The neighbors, watching Hans as he strolled up and down the little street afterward, pipe in mouth, nodded and smiled to one another. "Ah, when there is enough for two over yonder, there will be a wedding!" such was the form the whispering took.

Even the hardest workers take a holiday now and again, and the feast of St. John the Baptist is entwined in Frankfelburg the legitimate summer holiday of all its industrious inhabitants. The happy day is spent according to an old custom at a small village some three miles distant from the town, where a time-honored fair is held.

Lieutenant, fat woman, dwarfs, giants, all the hundred and one shows that are the rightful property of a fair are to be found there, and later on there is dancing under the soft evening sky, and after that, home early, so as to be up and about on the morrow, to work, if possible, harder than ever, to make up for the wasted day.

To Rose Cordier, with her quick French blood, her youth, her light-heartedness, this fete was one to which she looked forward for many weeks beforehand, and the little foreigner knew she was regarded as a belle and toast, and this was looked upon as almost a rare quiz-ion of the entertainment.

The neighbors smiled more than ever when they saw Rose come out of her door the morning of the 24th of June, looking as fresh and bright as the red roses in her cheeks and hair appear immediately afterward, a companion rose in his button-hole.

There was much lounging about in little groups preparing to start themselves to the scene of festivity; many of the women busied in their arms and little things clinging about their skirts, but they had time to give an admiring glance at this other couple first.

"Behold we start!" said Hans, suddenly, a little constraint apparent in his voice, "would you come into my stocks, Mademoiselle? I have been working at something I should like to show you."

"Yes, truly, I should like it. I have never been there just as yet."

They turned back as she spoke, and he pushed open the door.

"It is not finished yet, not finished yet, but it is to be a wreath of roses."

He led her as he said these words of where on one side, out of the way to the workshop, stood the half-completed circle of carved flowers.

"It is pretty," she said. And then, "It is an order? What will you get for it?"

"No, it is not an order," he said, a little flush on his face, "I have been doing it in the spare moments after my day's work."

"It is pretty," she repeated, touching her hand lightly with the delicately curled leaves, which surely had the stamp of genius upon them; "but it is something," she added, after a pause.

"What?" he inquired, eagerly. "I have looked at it so often that I cannot find out whether it is right or wrong."

"I know," she exclaimed, triumphantly. "Color! Ah, Monsieur, if you could but see the wreath of roses I made last week for the Comtesse von Adelsfort for a ball you would know what is right—eh!"—with a little clasp of her hands—"it was perfect! Perfect as Love!"

Her thoughts had quite wandered away from the stone flowers before her; indeed, she did not remember them until they stood once more in the street, with the door closed behind them, and then she guessed her that she might have been rude.

"They are very pretty," she said, softly, "but you see they are not finished yet. When they are, perhaps, who knows, you might sell them."

"Perhaps," he said. "I could try if you what it; but when I made them I thought"—the color swept into his face—"that you would like them."

"Yes, so I should if you were rich enough to give presents, or if—— Well, you will not mind my speaking the truth to you? You are rather a peasant, are you not? This is a bad thing," shaking her pretty head. "It does not make a fortune, and money, you know, one must have. So take my advice—leave off carving things no one cares to buy, and only do what you can sell. You are not angry?"

"Angry!" echoed Hans, "when you are so kind as to take an interest in me and wish me well! Why——" But here the girl reached the doorway, laughing crowd, and the spot where the omnibus was awaiting them, and the sentence had perforce to await completion at some future time.

And it was a sentence Hans had not intended to complete. Not yet, and by, when there was a little more money in his pocket, and a home worthy of offering to a wife, then it would be time enough to utter the sentence. But on to what one occasions, it was a case of "man proposes," at least so far as Hans was concerned, for the long, joyful day over, and tired holiday-seekers beginning to consider the quickest way home, he found himself under a soft, starry sky walking townward by the side of Rose Cordier.

"It would be pleasanter to walk," he had said, standing by the crowded omnibus, filled with drowsy, crying children and wearied mother. "Are you tired, Mademoiselle"—after a second's pause—"would you rather drive?"

"No, I will come with you," she had replied; "it will save the sous."

So they had started homeward together. And ere very long Hans found himself reverting to those unfinished words of the morning.

Love-making seemed so natural, so desirable under these circumstances, that it was difficult to think of waking up on the morrow to the hard day's work, and the knowledge that where it is so difficult to keep one, wiser would be done if there was yet another.

"It is selfish of me to ask you, Rose, when I have nothing to offer; but I am young, and strong, and willing to work and I love you, Rose."

Hans stood still as he spoke, and his voice trembled as he clasped the girl's small hands in his.

Rose was moved, too. The tears stood in her bright eyes, her cheeks heaved pain in the starlight.

"Yes, dear Hans," she said, timidly, in that sweet foreign tongue he had learned to love, "but, you see——"

"Yes, I see. We could not live upon nothing. No, alas, no! But, Rose!"—the color flashing up into his face again as he said, hesitatingly, "we might be engaged? Could you—oh, I know it is asking a great deal, but could you wait for me?"

"Ah, Hans, you must not think me unkind, but—it would be so long——" There was no mistaking the girl's tones, even if the words were a little vague.

"And there is Andre Leroux?"

"He is from my country," cried the girl quickly, pleading a bright, rosy red. "It is natural, among strangers, I should like to see and talk to a countryman of my own."

"Yes, dear Rose," Hans had replied, "you are quite right. I was selfish to think of you only. Of course you must have your language. It must be often lonely for you."

"Yes, Hans," Rose replied, brushing the tears out of her eyes. "If it were not for you, I should find the little street but dull and sad since the poor mother died. And, ah," as they entered the said street, "here we are at home! How quickly we have come! Good night, Hans."

She stretched out her hand as she spoke, and again Hans took it in his, and looked down at the pretty face.

"It is such a pity," she said, softly, "that you have no money."

"Such a pity," he echoed, sadly, loosing her hand as he spoke.

"And you are not angry with me?" she went on.

"Angry? no, certainly not. Why, I see of course you were right. What is the use of me to ask you to wait, you might be an old woman before I had enough for us to marry on?"

"Yes, dear Hans, it would never do. I knew you would agree with me when you thought it over. But you will still remain my friend?"

"Always your friend, Rose. It does not matter, you know, how poor a friend is." Then they parted—Rose to weep a few tears, and then to fall asleep and dream of Andre Leroux; Hans to ponder over whether there was nothing to be done, nothing he could do, to better his position.

It was so difficult, more difficult in the prosaic light of day even, than when dreaming over it pipe in mouth, in the hot summer evenings.

Carving the letters of a dead friend's name—more often painting them on the common black wood for the customers who sought out the little atelier of Hans Gottlieb were not often well-to-do—is not a swift road to a fortune.

And although he was not proud, and after Rose's remarks about the time wasted over the wreath of roses, which he had hoped might have been turned to better account, he had done what little odd jobs he could after working hours, until even then the little heap of savings did not seem to increase much.

And oftener and oftener now, Hans noted a certain M. Andre Leroux come up the narrow street of an evening, to walk up and down in the twilight with his opposite neighbor.

Each time the sight of the spruce French flower-maker—for Andre's trade was the same as Rose's—sent a thrill of pain to the great honest heart of Hans Gottlieb. But he did not repine, did not blame Rose. It was one of the many misfortunes of not being rich, that was all. But not a cause for complaining, only a burden, like so many others that fall to the lot of the poor man—a part of his day's work.

It was not so often now that Rose Cordier ran across in the gloaming to ask how his work progressed, and the neighbors ceased to gossip and nod their heads when they saw them speak to one another. "It was changed, all that they had thought likely to come to pass in the wind was in another quarter now—they could see, ah, yes, it was not difficult to see what was coming."

Only the children did not forsake Hans, but were just as eager to talk to him and run after him as in the days when there was no spruce Frenchman to shew with him the honor of the

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

A Baptist newspaper printed in the German language has been established in Hamburg, and in less than three months it secured four thousand subscribers.

Stability out of the pulpit often speaks more eloquently than ability in it. When the standard bearers are lighting among themselves they cannot do much execution in the enemy's ranks.—N. Y. Herald.

Nonconformist preachers in England are said to have always been more given to resist the votes with hand, arm and body than the orators of the Church of England. But of late years a certain school among the latter have studied Continental models in preaching, and have borrowed from the preachers of France and Italy gesticulation as well as language.

Not far from the Ameer's palace in Cabul there is said long has been an American church in which Christian worship has been permitted undisturbed through the many civil changes and dynastic changes that have taken place in that city. The number of the Christians was formerly considerable, but at present there are not more than twelve. On week days of late they have been worshiping according to the Persian version of the English prayer-book.

—The Ritualistic troubles in South Africa seem nothing of their serious-ness. Bishop Merriman entered the Cathedral at Grahamstown several weeks ago with the intention to preach the sermon, but when the prayers were closed the Dean without loss of time began to read the text himself. The Bishop was then heard to say aloud from the chancel: "Before God and this congregation I protest that I am interrupted in my ministrations in this place." After saying this he walked deliberately from the chancel down a side aisle and passed out of the Cathedral.

—The Rev. John L. Taylor, Smith Professor of Theology and Homiletics in the Seminary at Andover, and Lecturer on Pastoral Theology, and the Rev. Austin Phelps, Bartlett Professor of Sacred Rhetoric, of the Andover Theological Seminary, have resigned on account of ill health. Professor Taylor has been connected with the Seminary nearly thirty years as Treasurer, Trustee and Professor. He leaves a parting gift to the treasury of twenty thousand dollars. The Seminary has, with Professor Taylor's gift, received in cash and subscriptions during the past year about two hundred thousand dollars.

President Eliot's views on education, as expressed in his address at the Smith Academy College in Massachusetts lately, are the cause of considerable comment: "I may as well abruptly avow," he said, "as the result of my reading and observation in the matter of education, that I recognize the elemental acquisition as an essential part of the education of a lady or gentleman—namely, an accurate and refined use of the mother tongue. Greek, Latin, French, German, mathematics, natural and physical science, metaphysics, history, and aesthetics are all profitable and delightful, both as training and as acquisitions, to him who studies them well; but rigorous and true English and one of them has the least claim to be called an acquisition essential to a liberal education, or an essential part of a sound training."

Locusts in the East.

A resident of Smyrna furnishes some interesting facts concerning the locust pest in the East. He says: "In the month of May, 1875, I went by rail to a village situated about five miles from the town of Smyrna. On one part of the line there is an incline, which I noticed we were ascending at an unusually low rate of speed, and the engine was puffing and laboring in a most unaccountable manner. On looking out of the window to ascertain the cause, I perceived that the ground was literally covered will locusts, and scarcely a minute had elapsed ere the train ceased to move, owing to the rails having become wet and slippery from the number of these insects that had been crushed on the line, sand was thrown on the rails, and brooms were placed in front of the locomotive, by which means the train was again set in motion, and we finally reached our destination in thirty-five instead of fifteen minutes, the usual length of the journey. On entering the village, I called at a friend's house and found the inmates assembled in the garden, drawn up in battle-array, armed with brooms, branches of trees and other implements of destruction, waging war against their unwelcome visitors, the locusts, which, it appears, had settled the over walls of the premises, taking the place by assault, and were committing sad havoc on every green thing to be found in the garden. The united efforts of the household, however, were powerless against their enemies, which were momentarily increasing in number; so these were compelled to beat an ignominious retreat and seek refuge in the house.

"Locusts are first seen toward the end of April on the slopes of the hills, where the eggs of the females had been deposited the previous autumn. When born they are about the size of ants, but develop in a wonderfully short time to their full size. Early in May they are sufficiently strong to travel all day on food, collecting together at night in dense masses. At sunrise they recommence their march—their heads invariably turned to the south—devouring every green herb that comes in their way, grass especially being their favorite food. In the rear of these advancing armies others are following, which subsist on what is left by their more fortunate companions of the advance guard. Toward the end of May locusts are sufficiently developed to take short flights on the wing, and wherever they alight woe betide the unfortunate owners of the property! In June and July they rise to a considerable height in the air, their infinite numbers occasionally darkening the sun. As at this season of the year there is no more grass in the plains and the corn has been harvested, the vineyards are unmercifully attacked as soon as the leaves of the trees, and when hard pressed for food even the bark of trees is not spared by their voracious teeth. Locusts die off in August; but before this occurs the females bore holes in the ground on the slopes of the hills sufficiently large to insert their bodies, then the tiniest I am assured by eye-witnesses—cut all their wives' heads, and thus the eggs which are contained in the females' bodies averaging about seventy in number—are preserved against the inclemencies of the winter season.

"It occasionally happens that locusts disappear for a number of years in succession; it is therefore presumed that, in seasons of scarcity they are compelled, before the breeding season, to take long flights in search of food; and when they do occasion millions of their dead are found on the shores of the sea, and the effluvia from their bodies often occasions great sickness. In the year 1828 locusts lay two feet deep in the Bay of Smyrna. Shipping and typhus and other fevers became so prevalent in the town that many families left in addition to leave took refuge in the country villages. With a proper government, this Eastern plague could by degrees be done away with; but the Turks leave every thing to fate; and although occasional orders are given by the Governors in the interior for their destruction when they first appear in the spring, only half measures are taken, and little is gained by these futile attempts to destroy them. In former times Cyprus was annually devastated by locusts; but of late years this great infliction has almost ceased to be a source of anxiety to its agricultural population, owing to the intelligence of a European who holds property on the island, and who invented the following simple method of destroying them in their infancy, which has been already alluded to in the public journals:

"Locusts, as mentioned before, are born on the slopes of the hills, and when they are sufficiently developed to commence their work of destruction, descend into the plains in long and regular columns, never deviating from their path. Anticipating this method of progression, trenches are dug at the base of these hills; and when the locusts are within a few yards of the pits, they are inclosed between two long strips of canvas placed perpendicularly in parallel lines leading to the mouths of the pits. A piece of oil-cloth is then spread on the ground, extending a few inches over these trenches in a slanting position, over which the locusts continue their advance, and are precipitated into these traps in innumerable quantities, and immediately destroyed. If the Turkish Government followed the example set them by the inhabitants of Cyprus, Asia Minor would soon be free of locusts; but as there is little chance of this being the case we must expect a yearly increase of these insects, and trust to natural causes for their destruction."

How Much a Menagerie Costs.

It may be interesting to a large class of readers to know just what a menagerie would cost them. There are, no doubt, many deserving people in this country who would like to add a tiger or hyena to their list of household pets, if they only knew where these docile creatures could be obtained, and what the expense would be. England does a large trade in wild animals, and they are rather cheaper there than in this country. Still, the unhandiness of getting them here more than makes up the difference. Don't expect to get snakes and such things to mail, they dislike to be stamped by the active clerk, and a clerk generally feels embarrassed when the snake is loose in the office. A tiger or a lion can be had for $400 each; $100 gets a very good arbutary of leopard, although $100 will buy an inferior kind; black panthers cost $250; crouded tigers come as high as $1,500, and economy would suggest a sparing investment in animals of this class; a lynx in England costs $50, but they can be had for nothing in Canada. Canadians miss lots of good chances to catch a lynx, for the Kanuck generally has a fowl race against time the moment he sees one, and thus neglects to seize him. The lynx that he doesn't catch is the famous missing lynx. One hundred and twenty-five dollars will get you a polar bear, and $20 a brown bear; a brown bear is just as submissory as the others and much cheaper; alaska coat $50, but you can get plenty of them in America, sitting around groceries and talking politics; $25 gets a very good wolf, although many persons can get them cheaper, in fact, they have unrt work keeping the wolf from the door. Aard wolves cost as much as $500, no doubt because they are so Aard to get. Monkeys cost from $2 up to $500. Of course, for the latter price a regular Darwin can be had. A zebra will cost you $500. Be sure and get one of the right stripe. Kangaroo costs from $50 to $250. Feed them on hops. Every family needs an elephant, and will be pleased to know that one three stories high can be bought for the trifle of $1,500. A two-story elephant costs $750, a cottage elephant $500, while any amount of small elephants, for parlor pets, can be bought for $200. Now we come to luxuries. A rhinoceros should not be indulged in unless the purchaser has a good bank account. A very ordinary rhinoceros costs $2,680, while a pretty desirable article comes to over $5,000. A person must have the rhino to indulge in a rhinoceros. Now go ahead and make your selections. "Then pay your money and takes your choice."—Detroit Free Press.

The Way it Works.

The editor was sitting in his sanctum when a thin, lemoning under-sized specimen of humanity sidled wickedly in with the paper in his hand, and, pointing to a small paragraph, read: "Dr. genial Colonel Mudsill always thinks of taking an Eastern journey soon. May he enjoy a pleasant trip is the wish of his many friends."

"Now, sir!" said the wasted man, "I am Colonel Shuddleclack, and I have called to inquire by what authority you make this use of my name in your paper?"

"First time I ever saw it," replied the editor, glancing at the item, "but I suppose it's all right. My local reporter is quite enterprising in his pursuit of news."

"But I never gave him permission to use my name in this manner," persisted the Colonel.

"Very likely," said the editor. "But you are going East, ain't you?"

"Certainly."

"And you haven't any objection to your friends wishing you a pleasant trip?"

"That is all right, but I don't want my name in the paper, and the future you will oblige me by leaving it out."

"Of course," said the editor, "if you desire it," and the Colonel he wed himself stiffly out.

"John," said the editor to his office boy, "follow that man and see where he goes, and come back and report."

John did as he was requested, and shortly after he came back and reported that Colonel Shuddleclack went to the counting-room and bought twenty-five papers, which, after marking something in them, he ordered put in wrappers, and was busy in directing them.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

Presence of Mind.

A little time ago a young man died in Philadelphia who was popularly known, from his swiftness in running, as "Deer." His story was a singular one.

A few years since he was a ragged, shrewd lad, peddling newspapers about the railway depots. One day he happened to be on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad when he saw an engine shooting down the track without any driver or tender. By some chance it had been separated from the cars, and was driving on alone.

The boy knew that it would meet an express train this side of the next station. He had about four minutes' start, and darted down the track after it. The engine was, of course, not at full speed, yet nobody but Deer could have won in such a race.

He did win; was cool enough to remember the signal to the station-keeper necessary to have the switch placed so that the engine would be turned on to another track. It was done just two seconds before the express train went thundering by.

Deer, for this service, was granted by the Pennsylvania Railroad Corporation a monopoly of the newspapers and book trade on its trunk route, and from this he derived a handsome income. It was to the boy's credit, as well as to his fleetness, that hundreds of human beings owed their lives.

Another instance of the effect of presence of mind in the face of imminent peril, occurred a few weeks ago in the City of New York, where a match factory employing several hundred hands was found to be a box of twelve, to be in flames.

Instead of yelling fire, as most boys would have done, he went to the foreman, whispered to him his discovery, and quietly dismissed, and it was not until they had reached the street that they knew the danger they had escaped.

A panic would have inevitably resulted in great loss of life.

Now boys cannot be taught self-control, but they can be taught self-control, and the rare ability of keeping their wits about them in sudden danger, which is a much more useful quality.—Interior.

The Chestnut Harvest in the Apennines.

The chestnut harvest, which takes place in October, is the great event of the year in the Apennines, and furnishes a recreation, rather than a task, to all classes of the population. The schools have their annual vacation in that month, that the children may assist in it, and it is difficult to find hands for any extra household work while a pleasant gypsy life goes on under the trees. The stony woods are then alive with merry parties pickling the mahogany-brown nuts from among the fallen leaves, and dropping them into long canvas pouches slung at the waist for the purpose. The boughs are never shaken to detach them, and the burrs fall singly as they ripen, rustling through the leaves, and breaking the forest silence with a heavy thud as they strike the ground. They lie till picked up from day to day, during the appointed time for gathering them, which lasts a month, and is fixed by municipal proclamation—commonly from Michaelmas Day, September 29, to the feast of Saints Simon and Jude, October 28, but sometimes extended by special request, if the season be unusually late, for ten days longer. Any one wandering off the recognized paths throughs the woods during that period is liable to be shot by the proprietors, as in the Swiss vineyards in vintage time, but this sanguinary law seems to remain a dead letter. After the legal term has expired, the woods are free to the whole world, and are thronged by troops of beggars, picking up any chance belated chestnuts, which, failing now, are the prize of the first comer. Those that drop as early as time on a road passable for wheeled vehicles are also public property, and, as the highway runs through chestnut woods, the poor have a little harvest by the roadside. The proprietors of woods too extensive for the gathering to be done by the members of their own household, engage a number of girls to assist, giving them food and lodging for forty days, and to two persons out of every ten employed on her departure. After their day's work in the woods they are expected to spin or work in the evenings for the benefit of the housewife, who thus gets her winter supply of yarn or linen greatly well advanced in this manner. The peasant girls look forward to being employed in this way as a great treat, and will often throw no other occupation so willingly. Indeed, the chestnut season it is indeed sufficiently pleasant, for the lovely weather of a dry October among these Tuscan highlands makes open-air life unalloyed pleasure, and, on the other hand, one can hardly conjure up a more dismal picture than one presented by the dripping chestnut woods if the autumn rains have chosen that month for their own, when the shouting floods of heavy thunder-showers allow the unhoused peasants no day for their work, and the soaked burrs have to be fished out of the swirling yellow torrents that furrow the ground in all directions. Wet or dry, however, October, unless the yield be exceptionally scanty, is a season of much feasting and revelry through the country, while the paper ants consume the fresh chestnuts by the sackful, not roasted, as they are eaten in the north, but plainly boiled, and eaten hot from the husk. The great mass are spread on the floors of the drying-houses—low, one-storied, long-looking buildings scattered through the woods for this purpose, and which in the autumn seem to smolder internally, as the smoke of the fires kindled to raise the moisture from the fresh chestnuts escapes through all the interstices of the roof and walls. From the drying-house they are taken to the mill and ground into farina dolce, a fine meal of pinkish color and sickly-sweet flavor, which forms the staple food of the population. From this they make polenda, or porridge, in other districts made from Indian meal, and cakes, round cakes baked between chestnut-leaves, which are kept and dried for the purpose, with the result of imparting a slightly pungent flavor of smoke that the stranger will hardly find an improvement. Other dainties, too, are made from the chestnut flour, such as cakes covered with chocolate and sugar, but none are likely to commend themselves to Northern palates.—Cornhill Magazine.

Money and Happiness.

If the question were put, what is most likely to bring happiness and satisfy unjaded, nine men out of ten would answer, "Money." Certainly money is not to be despised. It will buy whatever is needful to satisfy the wants, to gratify the tastes, or to enhance the importance of its possessor, but it can neither purchase happiness, nor, in some cases, even secure physical comfort.

Baron Lionel de Rothschild, the most conspicuous representative of money, has recently died. He was a financial King; or, rather, he was the financial King. Nations could not go to war without his aid and permission. And his tastes been luxurious, he might have imitated the luxury of Sardanapalus, for whatever money could procure might have been his. Of course, he was a happy man. Before we decide, let us read this description of his physical condition. For the last seventeen years of his life he was a cripple from a disease in the nature of rheumatic gout, affecting the joints of the lower limbs. During all that time he seldom walked. At first he was able to move about, but the least exercise caused pain, so much pain that he gradually gave it up altogether. He was usually carried or supported from one room to another by two attendants. On his best days he would sometimes struggle along for a few steps on his own legs, but these occasions of late years were rare, and the pain he suffered was distressing. He had to bear violent headaches also, depriving him of sleep.

This was the man who, probably, more than any other, excited the envy of his kind. All his money could not buy him an immunity from pain. Who would not rather be a clerk or mechanic, on a small salary, than the King of Finance, with his physical disabilities? Of course, all rich men are not invalids, but most of them have their crosses, while hopes, poverty has its compensations. Few persons can become very wealthy, but happiness is within the reach of most. If this were better understood there would be less envy of rich men, and less sighing after

The next morning, after the dew is off, rake the partially dried grass into small windrows with a steel rake. Toss or spread the cocks the following morning, and draw in the hay in the afternoon.—Iowa State Register.

—It pays to mulch potatoes. Straw pretty well rotted makes about as good a general covering as anything. If the ground needs fertility, coarse manure is preferable. Any coarse material—leaves, swamp grass, salt marsh hay—has its good effect. Apply as soon as the cultivator is withdrawn. The benefit is more than is generally supposed. It keeps the ground moist and cool, two conditions essential to the best success of this plant. Weeds are also kept down, the ground retains its mellowness, the mulch preventing the rain from packing it, and the sun from baking it, and consequently the crop. Selling a Mine on Wall Street.

Not many months ago a man pretty well known on the Comstock went East to sell a mine lying in the Hycondi district. He had a map of the claim and its underground workings all done up nicely in pink and blue ink, and it was the finest piece of draughting as one would wish to see. He took his maps, traps and samples if ore to New York and began to "lay" for a customer.

Presently he fell in with a wealthy Wall street manipulator who got him on a string and wanted to get him a customer on commission. "Now look here, old man," said the Wall streeter, "you are from Nevada and probably a little green in the ways of the street. You will meet some awful sharp men here, and you must manage to be a trifle sharper or you can't do anything. Let me manage the thing and give me all I can get over ten thousand for the mine."

The Nevadan agreed, and the New Yorker took him into a room and began to give him some confidential advice.

"Now, here's the way to manage this thing. Of course, if you have a really good mine it won't be at all out of your way to salt it a little now, to take this map—it is a good map, but it ain't big enough. We must show up some more ore. I'll get an artist to put in some extra crosscuts and a shaft or two through the mine like pins in a pincushion—and that'll half sell it. The men we are to meet are fellows who never go into a mine, but all the same."

"This don't look to me to be hardly square," said the Nevadan, with a deep religious expression. "I want to sell my mine on its merits. I never sold a thing in my life on false representations, and I'm too old to begin now."

"Now, don't get riled, old fellow. You are not supposed to know what I do. Give me the maps and the ore, show me where to locate the shafts, and I'll make you richer and mellower."—Country Gentleman.

The considerable persuasion the mine-owner turned over his maps and ore-samples to the Wall-streeter, and that astute operator went on his way. The first step was to get an assay of the samples, and they showed up fifteen hundred dollars to the ton. This was the "salted" ore, plain thinking, and he went took to his Nevada friend and asked him how high the samples would run in his mine.

"Well, I hardly want to say," replied the Nevada innocent. "I guess them samples you've got now are good for fifteen hundred dollars to the ton. Of course, I just took an average from different parts of the mine."

"Fifteen hundred dollars to the ton! Such frauds are bound to come out sooner or later, and I've got more mines to sell I concluded to act on the square and get a good reputation for business on the street."

The New Yorker drew his conclusions and thought it would be a sharp thing to take that mine in himself.

"I've found a customer, old fellow!" he said, and cheerily drew a check for $10,000, professing to have found a customer and made a neat little commission. "Bring along some more mines and let me sell 'em for you," he added. "You see I have facilities which you have not. We'll go round and fix up the deeds."

The Nevadan took the check, folded it up, and remarked:

"Now, I hope you've sold that mine on the square, and not got too much for it. It is worth ten thousand dollars as a fair speculation."

The Gotham partner forgood a couple of days afterward, and the New Yorker came out last week with some experts to look at their property he has so shrewdly acquired. Arriving at Pyramid, he asked for the Gold Run Consolidated.

"No such a mine," was the reply he got everywhere.

"Great Cæsar! I've bought the claim and paid $10,000 for it."

"Got bit, sure."

"A man showed me a map. Here it is," and the New Yorker pulled out the map which he had received from the seller. A crowd of Pyramiders gathered round and laughed uproariously.

"That's old Sawyer's work. Oh, he's a smart one."

Just then Old Sawyer, the foreman of the district, and an ingenious citizen of the district, and an ingenious an old mine owner as the coast ever produced, came up and looked over the map.

"It ain't correct, old boss," he said, addressing the New Yorker. "Too many ore bodies put in."

"But there's no shaft, no machinery, no mine!" roared the man from Wall street.

"Well," replied Old Sawyer, reflectively, "I don't see how you can scour. The fellows who bought it are the ones to kick. You get a handsome commission, you know."

"But the samples run up to $1,500?"

"Salted."

"I'm swindled!"

The Influence of Light Upon Live Stock.

As a general rule, light exercises an invigorating influence upon all domesticated animals, and is just as essential to their health and well-being as pure air to their baths. clean water to drink, and sound food to eat. Light hereases the process of waste, and accelerates and promotes all those organic processes necessary to life. In consequently causes the animal itself to be more active and micro lively, and makes the coat of hair smooth and glossy, and its color brighter or more saturated. Absence of light, or darkness, retards the organic processes, and has a relaxing or weakening effect upon the animal organism. An animal kept constantly in a dark stable is apt to become inactive and slow in its movements, and, if a work animal, will tease its embrace, because the process of waste, and consequently that of repair, decreases, and, if the same amount of food is consumed, an increased production, or accumulation, of fat or adipose tissue takes place; but the tissues are not firm and solid, but rather loose and flabby, and contain an abnormal quantity of water. An animal is always kept in a dark place, its constitution will finally break down, and dyscratic diseases will make their appearance.

A proper amount of light, especially in the stable, is also very essential to the preservation of the eyesight, particularly of horses. In a dark stable the eye is compelled to comparative inactivity, becomes unused to the effect of light, and, in consequence, will be weakened to such an extent as to be unable to bear any sudden exposure to strong light, which necessarily shatter the nerves of the eye the more, the less the latter are used to it. This explains why so many horses, raised and kept in stables destitute of windows, have weak or diseased eyes, and shy at almost everything on account of their imperfect vision. In a horse accustomed to darkness, a sudden exposure to bright daylight, especially if the ground happens to be covered with snow, may even temporarily affect the brain, and cause a fit of vertigo. A continued lightness of dazzling light—for instance, of light reflected from a white wall—is also very injurious to the eye, and disables the latter to accommodate itself to comparative darkness, and to see things in their proper shape and form. Horses, stables which are too dark, and stables in which the windows are so situated as to allow the rays of the sun to fall on the animals' eyes, injurious to the eyesight, and apt to cause eyes-diseases of dangerous symptoms. Some horses so called aldinos especially—have naturally weak eyes, easily irritated by light, and shun, therefore, a great tendency to shy. To such, a stable that is neither too dark or too light is particularly injurious.

A moderately-dark stable is very suitable, and to be recommended, especially in the summer, for animals which have been working all day outdoors, and need rest and recreation because the immediate darkness, by partial absence of light, reduces the sensitiveness of the retina of the animal organism, and prevents such irritation caused otherwise by flies. A moderately-dark stable for the same reasons, is also desirable if it is intended to fatten an animal rapidly for the shambles. But, as a rule, in this case, the stable must not be destitute of windows and of ventilation, or be absolutely dark; on the contrary, the windows ought to be efficient in number and size to make the stable perfectly light if desired, but the same must be so arranged as to admit the light to shine on the light either by shutters or by window-shades.

A stable destitute of windows, or destitute of light because the windows are kept closed, is injurious to animals, must be considered as exceedingly injurious to health, because it pro-disposes to scrofulous and tuberculous disorders, and tends to aggravate almost any other disease that may happen to make its appearance. Any animal so confined becomes exceedingly lajurious to young, growing animals; and that the more if the food, at the same time, is scarce, musty, or otherwise defective in quality. Tuberculosis in cattle, especially, is a frequent result of dark, underground stables, destitute of ventilation, but also of ventilation, because such stables are not only dark and filthy, but usually also very damp and filthy.

The windows of a stable, especially of a stable for horses, should be situated in the back wall and in both sides completely, for the going to and from the stable comes in through the manger, or behind the animals, and, if the light comes in from the front, it has a dangerous tendency to blind the eyes of the same as they stand when tied in their stalls. One-sided light—that is, light which strikes only one side of the animal's eyes and leaves the other side remains constantly in the shade, or in comparative darkness—is very injurious and apt to cause a host of eye-diseases and defective vision.

Such an exposure, especially in the summer, when the temperature is high and the rays of the sun are coming down almost perpendicularly, is very dangerous, and causes not unfrequently a fatal affection of the brain, known as sunstroke. It is more dangerous to drive or to harness them to other animals, but probably most dangerous to the former. The surest prevention, of course, consists in avoiding exposure in such a manner as to make it impossible, the consequences (sunstroke) may be prevented by protecting the head of the exposed animal by means of a white or green hood, or by means of a wet sponge, etc.; and by taking care that the animal has a frequent opportunity to drink, and does not suffer for want of water. If the bad consequences (sunstroke) have made their appearance, liberal applications of ice, or of ice-cold water, on the head, and along the spinal column, seem to constitute the best remedy.—Experiments, in Chicago Tribune.

A Bantam Rooster's Fight with a Fox.

Mr. W. P. Levis, proprietor of the "Gem City" paper mills, has a miniature zoological garden at his abode on East Water street, and among the collection is a diminutive bantam rooster that has exhibited a spirit of heroic bravery as great as did the Cincinnati hero in whipping a lioness. A few days since a tame crow, while taking a meditative walk, came in too close proximity to a sly old fox that was foraging round near his den, where he is confined by a light chain. Before the crow was aware of danger the fox seized it. Then there was a loud "caw, caw," and a dapping of wings which silenced the attention of the little bantam rooster. He took in the situation at a glance, and rushed to the rescue of his feathered companion. The plucky little rooster flew into the face of the fox, struck hard with wing and spurs, and so worried the fox that he dropped the crow and gave his attention to the rooster, but his feathered antagonist proved as agile as he is brave, and so soon as he saw the poor crow beyond safely beyond the limits of Reynard's chain, he concluded the law of self-preservation was the next best thing in order. The fox, disheartened by his den so deeply chagrined at the turn of affairs he did not come out again that day.—The above is not a fable, every word of it is true.—Dayton (Ohio) Democrat.

—A medical officer in the navy has been investigating the ventilation of ships, and finds that when the amount of carbonic acid gas reaches seven parts per thousand the air acquires a disagreeable odor—not because of the gas, however, but because of the organic impurities exhaled from the lungs at the same time and proportionate with the carbonic acid gas. "Fifty cubic feet of still air are destined by one man in a minute." Now, in our ordinary house rooms are so close as to permit the condition of "still air," for the keyholes alone would afford some movement and circulation, but a considerable amount of air circulation is necessary to effect a change of fifty cubic feet each minute. Key holes and door cracks are not sufficient for this. Each room should be provided with some efficient means of effecting a constant change of air.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly for July.

Indian Depredations.

The fair-reader shudders when she thinks of the settler's wife watching, from the door of her log hut, the scalping form of her husband going out to his stalk lairs—going out, perhaps, to return not again, for before eightfold a savage Indian may have his face among the prairie grasses. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, JULY 22 - - - 1879

For President in 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

Dayton SENTINEL.

NEW YORK, June 18, 1879.

The immense success of the two elevated roads now in operation, which notwithstanding the ill will leveled against them by property owners on the line, has very severely hit the Manhattan Company for new roads and new changes of grade. Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, the unfortunate pauper, who this year returned his tax notice with the startling assertion that he had no tax, while property above his debts, wants a line of his own from the 42d street depot to the City Hall, and has had a route laid out for him by the Rapid Transit Commissioners. He is having rather a squally time of it, though, despite the first successes on the Common Council, which has a voice in the matter, has pronounced strongly against giving away another valuable franchise, even to aid this worthy and struggling young man who has no property to pay taxes on.

Little by little the elevated roads are increasing their facilities. On the East side of the transit may be had from the Battery to the Harlem River, and on the West side the Metropolitan road takes passengers from Trinity Church to about 125th street. The East side branch of the Metropolitan road is well under way, and will probably be completed by fall. On Sunday last the Metropolitan road began to run trains as on weeks, through passing late in the day, at half past twelve, when most of the churches have dismissed their congregations. Travel on the Sunday trains was large, and the public seemed pleased that they can at last rest in a measure, as far as walking is concerned, on the first day of the week.

In spite of the opposition of a few reverend gentlemen, whose churches are on the line of travel, rapid transit on Sunday is an accomplished fact. As far as disturbing the congregations assembled for public worship goes, the elevated road can do very little harm—their noise would hardly be noticed—and as they can so quickly transport passengers from long distances, many churches might be benefited if the roads should begin travel on Sundays before church hours.

Other railroading than the elevated variety must be tolerably profitable business—for the officers at least. A legislative committee now in session here for the purpose of investigating the Erie Railway's management, has brought out among other points the fact that Mr. Jewett, receiver of the old and president of the new company, assumed its position in 1874, at a salary of $25,000 a year, guaranteed for ten years, and eked out by a bonus of $15,000 a year additional, or in all $400,000 salary for the ten years of his engagement, which I presume he is still drawing with commendable promptness and regularity.

It seems as though a man with that amount of wages might manage to make both ends meet, and perhaps save up enough to enable him to join the throng at Long Branch or Manhattan Beach or awhile, in the hentle term which is now driving everybody who can possibly afford it to the mountains of the soft coal.

The change, by the way, which has been wrought in Gotham's habits by the springing up of these gigantic Coney Island resorts is very noticeable this season. Before their establishment Summer recreation, if it must come, meant an elaborate packing up and and a total forsaking of the city for some comparatively distant point. But now a large proportion of pleasure seekers embrace the opportunity presented by these handy resorts, to take their vacations by piecemeal, sleep in their own beds and keep one eye on business even during the season of recuperation.

The revival of business about which everybody has been talking and hoping for the last few years, seems finally to have become a reality. Hardly since war times has New York city looked, felt and been so aware. Even the croakers have to recognize the new order of things to the existence of which all indications point. The July edition of Bradstreet's mercantile agency book, which is infallible authority in such matters, justifies the cheering outlook by showing a large net increase of firms in business since the culmination of the April scare, which could not have taken place had for the Panic in the affairs of men. There is a wonderful little instrument known to modern medical science as the sphygmograph, which under medical examination gives an exact measurement and character of a patient's pulse, and I think Bradstreet's may be called the commercial sphygmograph. Constantly watching the course of nearly a million merchants, and publishing four times a year the results of those observations in relation to reports, it furnishes an almost perfect record of the country's condition and progress. This progress has been so long in the wrong direction that the present unmistakable revival is a fit subject for general rejoicing.

You should have seen the crowd at Coney Island on the Fourth. Some say there were 150,000 people there. Those figures I have no doubt were nearly correct as to the crowd was as large that everybody except the true Coney Island enthusiast, was made uncomfortable. All went merrily during the day but the rain commenced to come down in torrents about half past seven in evening, and kept it up for two hours or more. It spoiled the fireworks, which I announced would be let off with such a blaze of glory. It must be said for the credit of the Island that many one willing to pay for it had plenty to eat and drink, and that the many thousand of excursionists were carried safely home.

The Bowery Theatre, which has been the paradise of newsboys and bootblacks, and has had an existence of about fifty years, will, about the first of September, be changed to a German theatre. When it was opened to the public on the night of October 2nd, 1826, there were three other theatres in the city—the Park, in Park Row, the Chatham Garden in Chatham street, near Duane street, and the Lafayette, in Laurens streets. The Bowery Theatre has suffered four times by fire, the last time being on April 20, 1845. The Germans in New York need a large theatre in that part of the town where they principally congregate—the Bowery and its immediate vicinity. The Stadt theatre, which was the home of the German drama and opera, was a big barn of a place, dirty, dank, redolent of bad odors, dangerous in case of fires, unsightly and inconvenient in every respect. It grew out of favor long ago. Up town on Fourteenth street, close by the Academy of Music, Adolph Neuendorff, who last Winter conducted the Philharmonic concerts, established a few years ago his Germania Theatre. It acquired great popularity for its capital presentations of light plays and operettas, but it was not suited to heavy works, and filled only a portion of the demand made by our German citizens.

On Tuesday the Jeannette, fitted out for a voyage of Arctic discovery by James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the Herald, and named in honor of the steamer, started from San Francisco for the North Pole. Mr. Bennett succeeded as well with his Stanley expedition in Africa, that he has the best wishes of New Yorkers, who appreciate his enterprise. Mr. Bennett does not accompany the expedition. More is the pity!

The Fourth at Boyne.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Wishing to show that we possess the necessary life and enterprise, that we are up with the times, to give patriotism in the fourth a thorough hearing and at the same time to furnish the people on this part of the world a little wholesome enjoyment, we decided to celebrate.

We were much sensibly aware of the arrival of the Fourth at a very early hour, by fierce cannonading and the rattle of musketry. Soon all was noise and bustle, and life and movement. Presently the people began to assemble, coming from far and near, arrayed in every description of holiday dress, and by ten o'clock our streets were lined with a motley assembly of men, women and children, all with happy faces, and all seeming bent upon getting the greatest amount of enjoyment possible.

At 11 o'clock the crowd formed into procession, and, led by the band, marched to the beautiful park on the bank of the river, where were provided a speaker's stand and comfortable seats for a large number. Here we listened to a prayer by the Rev. Willard Heath, the reading of the Declaration of Independence, and an able oration by Dr. N. G. Smith, together with appropriate music.

After which, dinner.

At 2 o'clock the people assembled at the bridge, where the real fun of the day commenced. It consisted of log-spinning in the water, walking a spring pole over the water for a prize, boat and wheelbarrow races, etc., for all of which suitable prizes were given.

The performances of the day were concluded by a grand ball in the evening at the new hotel of G. W. White, which was in every way a success. If we may judge by the appreciation manifested by those present. The Fourth was celebrated in a manner creditable to our young but thriving village. Everything passed off pleasantly, and to the satisfaction of all concerned. Visitors expressed themselves as never having spent a more pleasant and enjoyable Fourth.

The weather was all that could be desired. A copious rain the day before rendered the air cool and clear. The sun shone with a brilliancy seldom equaled. All Nature seemed to rejoice with the people on this the anniversary of American independence. All entered into the duties and pleasures of the day with a zeal that did honor to the memory of those patriots of old who fought and bled that we might be a free and independent people. We shall all look back upon this day as a bright spot in our history. May we all live to enjoy many more.

It was estimated that nearly one thousand persons were present during the day and evening. Eighty-two numbers were sold for the ball, which is, I believe, the largest party ever held in the county.

We would take this means of expressing our sincere thanks to the orator of the day, and others who so kindly assisted in the duties of the occasion.

By order of the Committee.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of incense, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up in disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. JOSEPH ARENS, aged seventy-one years, living near Greensburg, Pa., a few days ago shot and instantly killed his wife, aged seventy-three, and, after telling his sworn neighbors that he had killed the "old woman," placed the muzzle of the gun under his chin and deliberately fired and killed himself. MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—People would do well to be careful what they eat and the supply to their tables. The Kreuzer Zeitung states from analysis of a specific patented in Belgium, which is wonderfully like that of sewage water, the only material differences being the addition of some preparations to disguise the odor of the ingredients.

—Frenzy concludes that coal is not an organized substance, but that the fossil plant impressions readily became of it bituminous and plastic nature. The plants which preferred coal seem first to have undergone peaty fermentation, which destroyed all vegetable organization, and the coal was formed as the expense of the peat, by a secondary action produced by heat and pressure.

—An English physician relates that on the 14th of February his wife, after mixing some corn-meal for feeding the fowls, missed her wedding ring from her finger, and after a fruitless search gave it up for lost. On the 8th of April, while engaged eating an egg at breakfast, she felt the ring suddenly strike against something hard at the bottom of the egg below the yolk, and on further investigation found the lost ring firmly fixed by membranous adhesion to the bottom of the egg. The ring was of very large size, and was half the day before.

—At a recent meeting of the London Photographic Society, Mr. D. W. Bird read a paper on the "Photography of Vision," showing from researches made by Kuhne and Boll that a visual purple pigment exists in the eye, and that a theory is based upon this fact of a result similar to that which takes place in photography. A fixation takes place of an image in the eye by physical changes in certain minute rods and cones found in some membranes of the retina. The experiments appear to confirm the old theory that the eye of a decapitated person or animal retains the last visual impression made upon it.

—It is known that nickel, like iron, is magnetic, sufficiently ductile to be forged and drawn into wire after the fusion of fusion is very high, and, if melted in the proper kind of crucible, it yields a homogeneous regulus of a silvery whiteness, containing carbon. Cobalt, recently, exhibition has been made as to whether it is magnetic or when carbonized, is capable of being tempered and acquiring elasticity, and whether it possesses also the property of rendering steel less liable to oxidation. It seems, according to the report, that the result of this examination is to show that cobalt is magnetic in the floor until his own son should be once more ready to receive and, as hitherto, to administer the discipline of his door, and would, doubtless, had he not been found out in time, have forged coins with all requisite finish. It required almost a regiment of gendarmes to secure Wyss and carry him away to another cell, and the unfortunate engraver, etc. He was always ready to escort Mlle. Klise to the theater or try a new song with her. He was a convenient partner at a ball or a pateur, companion for a morning's shopping. Moreover, Mr. de Belandi's taste was a proverb. All this made his visits to the old Maison Pontneuf very welcome, and with him vanished some of the brightest sunshine that ever lighted up a dull room.

All the acquaintances and friends of the Hornus were eager and profuse in congratulations and inquiries. M. de Belandi's fortune, in favor of a great capital thing; that there was soon to be a gay wedding; and he joked Elise. Everybody observed what high spirits M. de Belandi was in; and yet for all the joking and the sighing, and the young sisters that she had sent to be copied, and seeing that the young man was in every way pretty she was loving—such a graceful, winning style of beauty, lighting up the gloomy, formal old room with her presence, and busy and womanly occupations! Yes, he should miss her terribly, no doubt; indeed, though it was "love," and to be most wished that carte-de-visite had never caught M. A. de Villani's eye. After all, why should not those young as she is? Then he checked these thoughts, and began to wonder how it would be settled. He turned back, feeling anxious and nervous, and by this time the interview must be ended.

It was so, and M. de Belandi entered his own villa in time to see his guest just a few steps in advance, and from the open door he could hear the gayest of voices. The tale was told in a few words, and the next day M. A. de Villani set off on his journey home, carrying his lost to forget that carte-de-visite.

There followed much commotion among the friends of the Hornus; nor did it end there, for it became the general topic of conversation. M. de Belandi felt dull, having lost his guest, and then there was the reaction and a famous consequent on the unusual excitement. Beside this, Elise was never now seen in her old humor, when he went in the house she was not in the drawing-room. He feared she was annoyed with him, and purposely avoided him whenever she could do so. When a meeting was inevitable there was a greater reserve and an increase of manner, so different from the old gentle pleasantness, that it made him unhappy.

"I don't know what ails her," complained the old father one day to M. de Belandi. "She pleased herself, or might have done so. But she is no longer the same girl. I was saying to her mother I wished you might call; but if any one can rouse her or find out what is the matter, it is yourself."

To please the poor old gentleman, M. de Belandi went at once to find Elise in a small boudoir, where she sometimes sat. He had often been privileged to enter the room; and now, as his knock met with no response, he pushed upon the door without scruple.

Elise had been crying; but as she turned and saw him, a flush covered her face, and she nervously tried to look what looked like a photograph, which she had evidently been looking at.

"What, another photograph," he exclaimed, trying to carry off the little awkwardness he felt by a joke. "Why, Rose, is it possible that there was a rival of Villani? Have you, too, been caught by a carte-de-visite?"

To his surprise, instead of meeting his joke with a smile or saucy retort, she bent her head, striving to hide her tears, and the hand which held the picture actually trembled.

"My dear Elise, what is it? Your father is quite unhappy about you. You are not an undecided person; but is it possible that you regret saying 'No?' A lady is allowed to change her mind."

Still her agitation seemed to increase, and she could not keep down her sobs. Presently she snatched her hand to her head, stammering some unconnected words about not being well. She forgot for the moment the photograph, which was by this movement exposed to view. M. de Belandi's astonishment was great indeed to see a very-fine-means flattering full-length photograph of himself.

He stood transfixed for a few moments, while a fell seemed to be suddenly raised from his mind, disclosing all things in a different shape, clear and defined—things which had hitherto been but dimly guessed at, and then suddenly hidden again, and while he was so gazing and so thinking, she looked up and discovered what she had done.

By way of correcting the mistake she made another; catching up the photograph with a little exclamation of shame, and then, with a sudden perception of what she had done, choking back her tears, she tried to explain "that her sister had given it to her," and that she had been turning out her desk, and so—and so—

But his eyes were now bent so earnestly on her face that she was in a manner compelled to meet his look.

"Elise, is it possible?" he whispered. Then presently he held out his arms. In a moment she was in them, clasped close, her tears falling softly. But a sudden change came over her face, and she struggled to release herself, saying—

"Leave me instantly! You have taken advantage of—I like you as a friend, of course, but—you misunderstand—"

"And I love you not as a friend, Elise. I have done so. But I would not allow it to myself even. I was too old for you, you only thought of me as a friend relation and mentor. I know now what it all means; my dread of losing you—"

"But you urged me on," she interrupted. "It was your words which nearly all but induced me to consent. You seemed to have set your heart on it."

"Not so. Let us sit down and quickly talk together a little," he said.

This they did, and he managed to convince her that if her heart had been given to him, it was not until she had full possession of his. But now could he, at his age, be so vain as to suppose that he had the shadow of a chance? He had tried to stifle every feeling bravely; too much so, indeed. But now, surely, she would not punish him for that?

The result of it all was, to the utter surprise of M. Borno, his friend M. de Belandi made a formal proposal for the hand of his daughter. The old gentleman had to seek for, and then pour out in a succession before he could believe that his heart's longing, looking first at one and then at the other in a way to bring up blushes as well as smiles on the face of Elise. When he really took it in, consent was fully given, and after a little more talk together, during which the old man began to wonder how it was they had never thought of this before. So this was why Mlle. Elise had shown herself so difficult to please.

In the course of time she confessed that she had only given up all hope when M. de Belandi had so urged her to accept Villani; and in the pain of that moment she had very nearly been driven, in a fit of pride and despair, to follow his advice.

There was a gay wedding; and when it was over, and the Maison Pontneuf was restored to its wonted quiet, old Mme. Borno, sitting in her easy-chair after the fatigue of the morning, exclaimed. "And it was all owing to a photograph, after all!"

A Turtle as a Detective.

BROWN'S street market on Saturday morning was the scene of a ludicrous incident. An aged daughter of the Emerald Isle, who manages to eke out an existence by hugging for "a little something to help an old woman along," approached a fish-stand, and appealed to the proprietor for help. "Just a fish, sir." He was busily engaged in waiting on paying customers, and, beside, "he paid for his articles, and could not afford to give them away."

"Only a little one," she persisted.

"I haven't got anything for you, so get out," he remarked.

She moved away, but not out of the building. Unobserved, she walked back of the stand, where a large tub, covered with canvas, attracted her attention. Cautiously lifting the cover so as not to make any noise, she ran her hand into the tub, and—well, one would hardly think she was able to give such a yell as that which echoed through the market. She had contained several snapping turtles, and one had caught hold of her fingers, causing considerable pain. "Och! misfer! may God bless you; take the crayther off; do, please." was her pleading remark to the owner of the "snappers." It was found necessary to kill the turtle before the fingers could be liberated, and when she was freed she left without further ceremony.—Philadelphia Press.

PIERRE.

I sat beneath a sprawling grapevine,
In the shade of the old farm house;
I had a little brown-eyed maiden
Clasp'd close to my manly heart.

Hair and face and eye-lash folded,
In bed with sunshine sifting through
Where the vine leaves clasp and trellis,
Twixt the child and Heaven's blue.

Through all her face was beaming
Of the struggle back to life.
After long and weary hours
With the raging fever strife.

Of the face who made the struggle,
Only one was happy—I,
Little Alice, mamma told her,
Pa the Doctor I and was gone.

And this lonely little sister
Dropped and caressed day by day,
Till they brought her from the city
To the green hills far away.

Still, the tender lips are trembling,
The soft eyes are filled with tears,
Suddenly she starts and listens—
What can break her baby fears?

Like an answer to her longing
For that sister lost and dear,
Comes the well-known voice, sweet, purely—
Through the air so sweet and clear.

"Birdie, Birdie"—still she hears it,
"Birdie" in her own, and sometimes far.
"Could it be," she thought, in wonder,
"That Alice left me quite alone?"

"Birdie" once again! Upspring,
In a transport of delight,
"I am coming, Allie, darling!
Wait—wait for me!" cried the child.

And into the sunshine flashing,
Hope and joy in heart and eye,
Fled the child, but ah! how changed
Upward sang toward the sky!

Never knowing—caring whether—
Blogging only, still, to hear
The sweet bird she thought an angel
Calling her so near.

But at last her weakness conquered,
And she sank down wearily,
Crying still in sweetest accents—
"Allie, darling, wait for me."

Then the angel bird, after sounding
Many times the silvery call,
And perhaps at times in mamma's arms
She told her how it was at all.

Mamma's arms were soon thrown around
As she stooped the lovely child,
"Darling, I was a witch-ed a music
That you thought an angel bird."

But the child said reproached—
"I was my sister I heard it say;
I am sure it was an angel bird,
Heaven can't be far away."

A PHOTOGRAPH FROM LIFE.

Great excitement was caused on a certain day in the usually quiet household of M. Borno, the rich retired farmer, by the sudden disappearance of his favorite daughter, Mlle. Artois, who resided in Rome, in which she informed her parents that she had married. Her sister Elise would soon appear at Villeiflera. And she further told them that the M. A. de Villani, with a comfortable fortune, had been struck with a photograph in a shop window—sentiment, perhaps, that he felt he must try every means to win the original for his wife. This photograph remained until the arrival of the young sisters that she had sent to be copied, and seeing that the young man was in every way pretty she was loving—such a graceful, winning style of beauty, lighting up the gloomy, formal old room with her presence, and busy and womanly occupations! Yes, he should miss her terribly, no doubt; indeed, though it was "love," and to be most wished that carte-de-visite had never caught M. A. de Villani's eye. After all, why should not those young as she is? Then he checked these thoughts, and began to wonder how it would be settled. He turned back, feeling anxious and nervous, and by this time the interview must be ended.

The citizens of Big Rapids vied with each other in manifesting attentions to the visitors, and in their efforts to add to the comfort and enjoyment of the gentlemen and ladies present. Among the events of the occasion was the reception of them splendid fire department, the company of which brought home an $800 horse carriage as a prize from the recent International tournament at Chicago. Their excellent band in their handsome uniforms added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion. To tell all that occurrence of Big Rapids did for the Association would cover this page, and we hear. After leaving Big Rapids a few of the editors went to Traverse City, and from there to Mackinac in City of Traverse, accompanied by a number of Big Rapids people. We remained in the city until Friday noon, preferring to enjoy the hospitality of friends than to encounter the excursion. Everything passed off pleasantly.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Matters are progressing finely here at the "Head," and begin to assume a more tangible form. Mr. Geo. Beardsley the "proprietor" has arrived to remain during the summer. His wife, accompanied by her parents, are expected as soon as the "White House" is ready for occupancy, which is to be about the middle of next week. Mr. B. will get the material together the coming winter for a dwelling which he will make this his permanent home. He is having the "Park" cleared of rubbish and otherwise improved. He intends to make it one of the most pleasant resorts to be found anywhere. He is clearing streets and lots and improving the looks of things generally. A building and has nearly completed a small building next door north of the post office which is to be occupied by Drs Sanderson & Southwell, as a temporary drug store and office. The lots, formerly used as a cattle yard, are being put into condition that they have some to stay. They have had several years practice and seem to know their business. We welcome them to our village as a much needed accession.

The lots on the north across now platted are nearly all sold, each to be occupied by a building, as soon are sold to no other way. The plat will be extended soon. There are several houses now in process of construction and several more to be commenced in the near future. A Mr. J. E. Ackley of Wis. has bought two lots on his a dwelling and the other form large store building, which he will occupy as a general store—largely boots and shoes. A Mr. Littlefield has bought the lot south of O. V. Monroe's hardware store, on which he is to erect a building 24 x 60 feet to be used as a store below and hall above. A son of the same gentleman completes the list of those contemplating a great market. Another gentleman is talking cabinet shop.

Now if some one will be kind enough to send us an editor, a lawyer and one or two gentlemen of leisure, we shall have all the attachments necessary to a full fledged town. They are, as is always the case, some of these will prove absentees but for the most part it is sure and the prospect is really quite flattering. There are various nationalities in Banks. A SUMMER HOTEL.

Charlevoix is Need of Another First-Class Institution of That Kind.

The unprecedented rush to Charlevoix thus far this summer from the cities, and the constant inquiry from those desiring to come, has unmistakably demonstrated the fact that we must enlarge our capacity for meeting the rapidly increasing demand.

That excellent hotel the Farmers City House, is full to overflowing, and its host can turn away scores from its hospitable doors. Our smaller boarding houses and many private houses are full, and still the cry is, "Can we afford to Build the travel to the place to the accommodations which we are now able to furnish?

The discovery has been grabbed, but is now fully rounded, however, that Charlevoix has faster attractions and more of them than any other of the resorts of Northern Michigan. It has been discovered that being situated a little over an hour's ride by steamer from the railroad affords an inducement that otherwise, and the swelling tide of summer travel is turning that way. Many people who come here accidentally or their pleasure go away determined to make this their summer home in preference to any other point in the north.

The plasterers and painters are putting the finishing touches upon E. Carpenter's fine new suit of rooms.

THE REVIVAL.

What the Increasing Activity in Business May Mean for Charlevoix.

In times past, before the genius and democratic institutions of our day, Charlevoix was looked upon by the business world as a naturally fertile spot in which to plant the profuse dollar. Visions of iron furnaces, tanneries, and even railroads, were planted on the fruitful and sagacious in the sand. Capitalists looked upon this spot with a jealous as well as a lustrous eye. But a change came over the spirit of our dreams when iron furnaces suspended, tanneries closed, and financial matters went to the darkest generally. If larger towns fell under this dark cloud why should not the lurks of the glorious prosperity be shut out from us as well?

But we prospered moderately even under the shadow of those dark days, and the beginning of the new era which just now seems to dawn, brings the voices of all business interests, finds us full of youthful courage and vigor.

And now, do not the signs portend a move from the great sea of business and commerce in this direction? Indeed, if we mistake not, its increasing waters are even now about our feet! Iron, that great staple of trade, upon which the commerce of the world in a great measure rests, is on the rise! and that means that the great machines for its manufacture must be multiplied, as well as the starting up of those which have so long lain in idleness. The revival of this line of business means the development of the broad forests of hard wood in Northern Michigan, located as they are in close proximity to the great mines of the Northern Peninsula.

And all these facts put together mean that one or more furnaces must be located at or near Charlevoix in the near future. We have so often recounted the extraordinary facilities existing here for enterprises of this nature, that it is unnecessary for us to say more. A glance at the map of Michigan and our coast line will suffice to show the position of the immigrant, the prosperity of this point over any other in this region for that business.

The dormant forces of nature existing here must be brought to serve the ends of commerce and that soon.

Wheat, $0.80, and bark $5.00, over the mill.

SMOKE-LESS.—It is gratifying to note the fact that the machinery of the village improvement has so far got into operation that the necessary steps for sidewalk building has been taken. A sidewalk the entire length of Mason street, on the south side will soon be built, also on Clinton and the west side of State street. A petition went to Supervisor Fleming for a walk on the south side of Bridge street. All will be promptly completed.

CHARLEY GAY, of the Big Rapids Pioneer Magnet, was in our sanctum during our recent absence, and this is what he says about us after he got home:

"At Charlevoix we called at the office of Hon. W. A. Smith, of the Sentinel, which we found ensconced in their new quarters, into which he had recently removed his "printing-house." He has everything arranged in applepie order, and we were pleased to observe the indications of thrift and prosperity which are apparent at that place of business."—P. S. Special excitement from home but we inspected the office "all the same."

THE idea which we regarded the possibility of a government appropriation for Charlevoix harbor as a fancy sketch—pleasant to look upon, but apparently afar off. We loved to dream about it, to talk about it, and to hope for it. Through the complications and vexatious impediments we gradually pulled ourselves up to the reality, and to-day work is in progress which before the season closes will make almost a harbor of refuge. We have fought the battle and won it! Many now consider for a full share of the fruits of the victory who never raised the ripples of the powder that it cost to win it. The fruits of these daily hours, days are being harvested throughout this season, and it multiplies in abundance as the years pass by. These thoughts lead us to ask: Why cannot greater success be accomplished in the coming season than in the past? We believe they can and will, and for this end we trust will permanently honor, prowl of material grow in the past, and encouraged by the signs of the times.

AN EASTERN TORNADO.

One of the Severest Storms Ever Experienced in the Section Sweeps Over Portions of Massachusetts, Causing Great Loss of Life and Destruction to Property.

BOSTON MASS., July 16.

One of the severest tempests ever experienced in this section swept over the city this afternoon. The duration of the storm, at its greatest violence, was about twenty-five minutes, and in that period great damage was done to life and property.

Reports from various points down the harbor contain accounts of serious damage and distressing accidents. Many small yachts and other boats were capsized. The most serious disaster yet reported is that of the small schooner Myrtle, of Charleston, having on board six persons, consisting of four women, a man and a boy. The schooner was capsized off Bird Island, and all excepting the man, Thomas Dunham, who clung to the mast, were drowned. The women were Margaret Dunham, wife of Thomas; Mary Ann Dunham and Susan Dunham, sisters; Hizzie Dunham, his niece, and a boy named Arthur Ryan.

A boy named Walter Hitchborne was also drowned by the capsizing of a boat off Hull.

The damage throughout the city can hardly be estimated at present, but will probably amount to many thousand dollars. In the southwestern part of the town it was particularly severe. Hail fell in large quantities, and a large number of windows were broken. Many trees were blown down, and some houses were unroofed. Chimneys toppled over, and the flood in some of the streets formed a river several inches deep. One man was killed by a falling chimney.

The loss in glass alone will amount to several thousand dollars. Many fine trees on Beacon Common and in the Public Garden were felled by the wind.

The hurricane struck Nantasket Beach about half-past five. The Albion House, a large hotel, and two large barns belonging to the hotel, were completely wrecked, burying Charles O'Hara, a driver, and Anna Ogilvie, cook, beneath the ruins. The former is badly bruised, and the latter had her shoulder dislocated and was otherwise injured. Thompson's photograph car was blown to splinters, and Charles Acker, the artist, received injuries which will probably prove fatal.

A coach was overturned and the three-year-old child of W. H. Joy, of South Weymouth, was killed.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., July 16.

This afternoon a tornado from the west struck the southern suburbs. Two persons were killed and three or four wounded—some fatally. Buildings were uncofed and blown down. Hundreds of trees were leveled, and fully $15,000 or $20,000 damage done.

A black cloud springing up suddenly in the west, while the thermometer indicated eighty-six degrees, was the first warning of an approach of the storm. In fifteen minutes the sky was so black that gas had to be lighted in the stores. Then, mingled with hail, rushing wind and almost incessant lightning and thunder made the storm more terrible, even if it was not so disastrous.

In the village little or no damage was done, the tornado taking a course from west to southeast about half a mile from the business portion. Toward the western part it first struck the Kellogg farm, occupied by Thomas Payne. The wall of the kitchen part of the house was blown in, and the barn completely demolished. Wagon was smashed, and hay blown away.

Following along the valley to the southeast, it leveled hundreds of trees. Bridget Tarpe's house, next in its course, was uncofed and the barn demolished, but the inmates escaped unharmed.

Pomeroy's factory was uncofed, the surrounding tenements damaged, and the building known as the Tammany Mowing was blown to splinters. In the building were Matthew Collins, ten years of age, who was crushed beneath the debris, and John Collins, his brother, a hat boy, had one leg broken and an old man named Mathern was very severely injured.

From the factory the wind tore across the fields, leveling fences, orchards and crops, and next struck south street. The Bidfield House was partly uncofed, George Wentworth's house was lifted from its foundation and turned around, and carried two rods, and other houses in the vicinity lost chimneys, piazzas, etc.

The Taylor place, occupied by Samuel Payne, a fine brick house surrounded by stately trees, was entirely uncofed, the trees all broken or torn up by the roots, and the place presents a scene of ruin and wreck.

Opposite, the residence of the Hon. J. A. Dunham was uncofed, the conservatory ruined and the barns were prostrated, but none of the people were hurt. His semi-law's residence on the south was also badly damaged.

A falling tree struck the horse of Mrs. Beckwith, of Stockbridge; the horse sprang around, overturning the wagon upon Mrs. Beckwith, killing her instantly.

The storm then passed over the open fields. No damage was done for a mile or more, when it leveled an orchard on Willis' place, tore up the road around Kernochan's summer residence, and demolished the iron bridge crossing the Housatonic River, and reached the buildings of John W. Noble. Two barns here were blown to pieces. Gleason's slaughter-house also tumbled into ruins.

From Noble's the storm rushed across the valley, leveling all in its way, and struck at last on the west side of Lenox Washington Mountain, where six barns were destroyed. Two houses were partly blown down, and all the fences leveled.

FITCHBURG, Mass., July 16.

The tornado here lasted but three minutes, and all the damage was done instantly. The spire of the Unitarian Church was hurled into Main street, opposite the Rollstone House. The tin roof of the City Hall was launched into the street. The easterly wall of the extension to the City Hall, in process of construction, was blown down, and several workmen had very narrow escapes. Trees along the street, from the Fitchburg Hotel to the Episcopal Church, were, to a great extent, blown down or broken off, and also several on Hartwell, Prichard and other streets. Many houses lost all their chimneys, several falling from the Fitchburg Hotel, and the damage to the City Hall is estimated at $11,000.

WORCESTER, Mass., July 16.

At Berlin a barn owned by Miss Burdett was demolished. A man named Cheney and two horses were killed. A man named Nourse is injured beyond hope of recovery, and two men named Marshall and Baker are seriously injured.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., July 16.

The storm of wind was very sudden. The base-ball stand in Hampden Park was blown to pieces, but the audience gathered to see the game between the Springfields and New Bedfords miraculously escaped serious injury, though several were badly bruised.

At East Hampton, Pomeroy Block was uncofed. Northampton suffered most. Her famous elms, some of them three feet in diameter, were torn up by the roots, and the prostrate trees scattered everywhere through the town. It is impossible to estimate the money damage, but it will seriously impair the town's picturesqueness. The Mansion House was uncofed.

Other towns thereabout suffered from prostrate crops and trees, and a picnic party on Mount Holyoke saw the ruins of six barns.

A Brave Man's End.

A man who once did a noble and heroic act has come to a dreadful end. One day a train was flying over the Pennsylvania Railroad at the rate of forty miles an hour. There was a child, a little girl, on the track, and she was suddenly discovered when but a short distance away. A glance was enough to show that it was impossible to stop the engine before reaching her. It was only practicable to slow the engine, and this to but a limited degree. The whistle was sounded, but the child was deaf or bewildered, and took no heed of it. There was but one thing to do, and that the railroad engineer did. He crawled down the fender or "cow-catcher," and, while thus flying over the track, he clung with one hand to the cow-catcher, and with the other in the nick of time he snatched the little girl literally out of the jaws of death, and sprang on with her in safety.

It is sad to know that a man capable of so act like this has met a miserable end. Some time ago Grier (for such was his name) went out to Leadville to seek his fortune. He found employment at the gold placer as bar-keeper in a place known as the Merchants' Restaurant. A short time ago one Ritteble, a liquor dealer from Arkansas, came to Leadville and made a partial agreement with the owner of the restaurant to take an interest in it. The bargain was not yet consummated, and there had been some bickering, in consequence of which the owner told Grier not to allow Ritteble to come into the place. Not long after this the two men came into collision, and one night, a few days since, a violent quarrel ensued. This was at the threshold of the saloon. A crowd had gathered at the sound of contention, but scattered at that of a pistol. Several shots were heard, and Grier fell to the sidewalk. He never spoke or breathed after his fall.

In the desperate life of the frontier or of the new mining camp violent death is frequent, and it often happens that those whose career is thus cut short are dangerous and murderous men, whom it may be better for the community to lose than to retain. But that a man like Grier should die so—a man full of courage and noble impulse, and one who, as we hear was liked and respected by nearly all who knew him—is melancholy indeed. Such casualties as this suggest afresh regret that if men must come into personal conflict, the custom were not prevalent in this country, as in England, of depending on nature's weapons alone, and eschewing those which give rise to such terrible and irreparable results.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A Brave Man's End.

LORD BEACONSFIELD said to a member of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, who came to tell him recently that the Chamber intended to vote resolutions condemnatory of the Ministerial policy on the Eastern question: "I have heard a great deal about Manchester clayed cotton," which is disgracing the English name in China. Please tell your Chamber that if they attend to my business I will try and attend to theirs."

WHAT makes most women wild is to wait for the postman half an hour, and then see him walk by indifferently.

READING aloud is the fashionable entertainment in Paris society at present.

Self-Reliance.

There is no one element in a man's character that contributes more to his success in life, than confidence or self-reliance in his own ability. A faint-hearted man is unstable, and will never excel. Faith in the endeavor to will and to execute is as important in a successful business career as is the keystone to the arch. A man possessed of a bold, daring and resolute will may be modest in revealing his powers, but will be determined in performing what he conceives to be right. To men with this never-dying faith there is no such word as defeat, and when obstacles present themselves in their path, it only results in their putting forth a greater effort to accomplish their purpose.

Toil, trial, disaster, gloom and danger may environ and threaten to over throw the most cherished plans, yet over and above all hindrances a bold soul will triumph and win fame and honor. Such discouragements that would retard the irresolute only discover the weak places to the brave, and, strengthening these, they renew the conflict with renewed vigor. Timidity creates cowards and never wins success. It is a strong and abiding faith in one's own ability to succeed that overcomes difficulties that others thought could not be surmounted.

In all the pursuits of life we find that those who possess power and distinction are strong and self-reliant in their powers, exercise faith in their own abilities, and carry out plans conceived in their own brain. Morse had faith in telegraphic wires, and Field in submarine cables, and, as a consequence thereof, the lightning is harnessed to convey the news of the world in every part of the habitable globe within the compass of a few hours. Two young men in 1862 commenced a banking business in Wall street in a small office. They had faith in their own ability, and also that of the United States to pay its great war debt. To-day they are the leading bankers in Government securities on this continent, their daily sales running into the millions, and their name and credit take high rank in all the financial centers of the world. Not many years ago Edison occupied an humble position as a telegraph operator; to-day his name and fame are world-wide as associated with some of the grandest discoveries of ancient or modern times. Astor, Stewart and Vanderbilt furnish examples in the large fortunes they created as to what well-directed energy and determination can accomplish in business pursuits, while the eventful life of the late Judge Parker is another striking illustration of the high position that can be attained by reliance and perseverance in the individual man, backed by a liberal endowment of common sense. In the ever-widening paths of commerce and the ever-increasing monetary circles there open up before the young men of the Nation rare opportunities for wealth and fortune. In agricultural, mining, industrial and mercantile pursuits like avenues to attain distinction are open to all. But fortune will not come by chance, nor distinction by hazard; both must be won by strong, heroic endeavor. Boldness is vital in the achievement of lofty aims, and nerve and grit are essential requisites in the battle of life. A man, to triumph, must have faith in his enterprise and reliance in his ability.—United States Economist.

Feathers and Feathers.

Let me take down one of the peacock's feathers while it stands on the mantelpiece in this Valhalla's vase, and closely examine its structure. It consists of a long central shaft, horny and tubular at the lower end, and filled with a soft, white, spongy matter, while a number of little barbed branches are given off on either side, curiously interlaced by means of tiny hooked filaments, whose myriad threads are far too numerous for the most industrious critic to count up. Every body knows that this tubular structure combines in the highest degree the mechanical requisites of lightness and strength; and everybody has read that it is employed with the utmost effect by human engineers, in such constructions as the great bridges which span the Menai Straits or the Niagara river. Evidently the peacock's feather, though now converted to a purely ornamental function, was originally developed for the purpose of sight. If I doubt it for a moment, I need only look at the quill pen in my hand, once plucked from the unresolved in their own brain. Morse had faith in wing of a flying bird, to see that the close textured and strongly woven, clearly belongs to a flying organ; and this beautiful mass of green and golden vanes or plumelets is evidently modeled on the self same plan. It is useless, or next to useless now, for flight; but it still bears clear traces of its original function in the structure and arrangement of its shaft and barbs.

Next let me look at the little downy feather I have abstracted from the Indian cushion. This is not a flying organ, nor did its representative or any early ancestor ever fulfill a similar office. Light, warm, soft, fluffy, its whole object is decidedly that of clothing against chilly weather, and protection against thorns or other rough bodies. Yet when I examine it closely, I see that the same general groundplan still runs through it, as that which ran through the goose-quill and the peacock's tail covert. "How comes this?" I ask myself. "Here we have a small, delicate, almost fleshy shaft, instead of the horny quill; and a feeble set of downy barbs instead of the strong, well-woven blade; yet the main features remain unaltered, though the function is entirely different. How can I account for this resemblance?"

The case of the ostrich and the aplteryx help to throw light upon the problem thus disclosed. Where birds fly very little, their feathers never acquire or else soon lose the distinctive quill-like character; but where birds fly much, the quill-producing tendency becomes strong and pronounced. Primarily, this tendency ought to effect only those parts which are used in flight, namely, to the wings and tail; and, as a matter of fact, we have seen that these are the parts which exhibit it in the highest degree. It would be almost impossible, however, that a change of such ungainliness should be set up in some of the feathers, without, to a lesser extent, affecting all the rest. We might as well expect that the hair on a certain patch of some animal's skin would grow thick and spikelike, without any corresponding alteration in the rest of his body. True, natural selection does sometimes produce this result for some special purpose, when it is highly desirable that a acquired character should be confined to a small area, as a rule, only one part of the skin hardens, like that of a turtle or crocodile, the tendency to bony development in the scales, while the rest of the body remains soft and pliable. So, in the case of the quill, we have seen that it is simply the mechanical requisites of lightness and strength; and everybody has read that it is employed with the utmost effect by human engineers. In such constructions as the great bridges which span the Menai Straits or the Niagara river. Evidently the peacock's feather, though now converted to a purely ornamental function, was originally developed for the purpose of sight. If I doubt it for a moment, I need only look at the quill pen in my hand, once plucked from the unresolved in their own brain. Morse had faith in telegraphic wires, and Field in submarine cables, and, as a consequence thereof, the lightning is harnessed to convey the news of the world in every part of the habitable globe within the compass of a few hours. Two young men in 1862 commenced a banking business in Wall street in a small office. They had faith in their own ability, and also that of the United States to pay its great war debt. To-day they are the leading bankers in Government securities on this continent, their daily sales running into the millions, and their name and credit take high rank in all the financial centers of the world. Not many years ago Edison occupied an humble position as a telegraph operator; to-day his name and fame are world-wide as associated with some of the grandest discoveries of ancient or modern times. Astor, Stewart and Vanderbilt furnish examples in the large fortunes they created as to what well-directed energy and determination can accomplish in business pursuits, while the eventful life of the late Judge Parker is another striking illustration of the high position that can be attained by reliance and perseverance in the individual man, backed by a liberal endowment of common sense. In the ever-widening paths of commerce and the ever-increasing monetary circles there open up before the young men of the Nation rare opportunities for wealth and fortune. In agricultural, mining, industrial and mercantile pursuits like avenues to attain distinction are open to all. But fortune will not come by chance, nor distinction by hazard; both must be won by strong, heroic endeavor. Boldness is vital in the achievement of lofty aims, and nerve and grit are essential requisites in the battle of life. A man, to triumph, must have faith in his enterprise and reliance in his ability.—United States Economist.

The current number of Scribner contains an article which comprises in a comprehensive manner much of the information which so far is to be had on this subject, and states that: "across the Sahara by steamer" promises at no distant day to be a possible thing. At first sight, the proposal of the English and French engineers to flood the great desert with the waters of the Atlantic seems visionary and impracticable, but a thorough examination of the subject will lead to a different conclusion. The great rivers of Africa are blocked by cataracts, and to this may be ascribed her almost complete isolation from civilization. Her harbors also are rare, for although containing nearly one-quarter of the whole land area of the earth, few indentations are observed on her coast line, which is shorter than that of any other continent. The great desert has also proved a barrier through which the civilizations of the Mediterranean could not pass.

Undoubtedly the most plausible and feasible plan of throwing Africa open to commerce is that proposed by the English engineer, Mr. Donald Mackenzie, and the French engineers, Captain Roudaire and M. de Lesseps. The former proposes to introduce the water from the Atlantic, the latter from the Mediterranean. The desert of Sahara covers an area of about three million square miles, or upwards from the Atlas Mountains on the north to the Niger, and from the Atlantic eastward to the Nile valley. It has been supposed that the entire district was a pathless waste, but late researches show that in far the larger part of this region consists of lofty mountains and fertile valleys, watered by rivers, which impart life to the vegetation near them. The population is large, living on extensive plantations and in walled cities. The climate in the more elevated portions is healthy and pleasant. In the Western Sahara the state of things is different. Between the parallels eighteen and thirty degrees lies a large tract of impassable desert sunk two hundred feet below the Atlantic. The length of this depression is five hundred miles, and its width one hundred and twenty miles, with an area of nearly sixty thousand square miles. There is little doubt that at one time it formed an arm of the Atlantic Ocean, as tradition reports the former existence of a large lake in this vicinity of Tuat, which was rapidly transformed into a sandy waste. It is agreed by explorers that a channel once connected the northeastern extremity of Shott with the Atlantic Ocean at a point near Cape Juby, opposite the Canary Islands. The channel terminates in a sand-bank which prevents the waters of the ocean from flowing into its bed. Its great mouth, the Boca Grande, formed between perpendicular rocks two hundred feet above the sea, is two and one-half miles broad, and is blocked by the sand-bank mentioned. The Shott is annually flooded by the simple excavation of a ship canal three hundred yards long through the sand-bank which prevents the inflow. The current which would flow through would rapidly clear away all obstructions and make for itself a deep channel.

Such an additional rainfall as would be the result of this large lake would swell the volume of the rivers which flow into El Juf, and it is put forward as an objection to the plan, that the evaporation from so large and shallow a body of water would deluge Northern Europe with incessant rains, and reduce materially the temperature of all the countries south of the Alps. But this fear originates from a misunderstanding as to the topography of the Sahara and North Africa. The Atlas Mountains on the north, twelve thousand feet in height, supply a sufficient barrier for the protection of Europe from any excessive humidity. The conviction of M. de Lesseps, after a careful examination, is that the climate will be improved, and most undoubtedly that of Africa would be entirely changed by the grateful rains which would, in time, redeem thousands of miles from the desert.

Borings are being extensively made by Captain Roudaire over a length of one hundred leagues and a circumference of five hundred leagues to establish the exact depth of bottom of the Shott in the basins of Tunis and Algeria, which would make other lakes entirely different from that of El Juf, and consulting with the Mediterranean. Every possible assistance is being given by the Bey of Tunis and the people generally, who feel that the opening of a large lake must be for their commercial and social benefit.

Although the basin of El Juf has been sufficiently examined to show that its submergence will not work harm to the residents of the desert, but will prove a source of untold blessings to the vast regions which environ it, yet Mr. Mackenzie deems it necessary that a thorough survey shall be made before the sea is admitted. But we may look before long for the completion of his magnificent scheme, and the consequent opening of Africa to commerce and civilization. Nor do we fear for the success of the French expedition; and the two great nations, England and France, by thus solving the mystery of the great continent, will earn the gratitude of the world of science, and ultimately secure a large trade with the teeming thousands who have been too long shut out from the world's markets by the dangerous and almost trackless Sahara Desert.—*N. Husband and Wife.

"Your husband was arrested by an officer, Mrs. Powers," said the Justice in Essex Market Court yesterday to a sad-faced little woman, on a charge of cruelly beating you. I have sent for you to make a complaint against him."

"Against my husband, sir?" she asked, in a low voice.

"Why, of course. Your face is cut and swollen, your arms black and blue, and your lips quivering now from the pain his brutality has caused you. Your cries were pitiful to hear, your neighbors say, and they said your husband is a drunkard and that you have to support him."

"Oh! let him go," said the little woman, crying. "He didn't mean to do it. We've been married just a year and a half. Our little boy is home asleep. I would not have it said his father ever had been arrested for beating his mother. You'll let him go, please do," and the woman wept afresh.

"And what do you say, Powers?" answered the Court.

"Say!" answered the drunken brute. "Why, I say curse her! I'll give it to her when I get her again. I'll stop her blubbering and her baby stories."

"You will not if I have the power to prevent you. You are committed for six months in default of six hundred dollars to keep the peace."—N. Y. Herald.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—To pickle onions select small onions, remove with a knife all of the outer skin so that each will be white and clean; drop into brine strong enough to float an egg and let remain there six hours. Bring strong vinegar to a boil; add bits of horse-radish and cinnamon bark, with a few cloves and two or three red peppers, and pour hot over the onions, previously drained from the brine.

It has been a subject of controversy among gardeners whether it is advisable to trim the vines to promote early ripening. I think that depends very much upon the soil and season. If the season is hot and dry, and the soil not very rich, you will scarcely hasten their maturing, while you will materially diminish their product by trimming; but if the soil is rich, and the season wet and cool, it will check their tendency to run to vine, and hasten their ripening by trimming pretty freely.—Agricultural Academy.

—Currant Jelly.—Look over the fruit and see that it is perfectly clean; crush and set on the back of the stove until heated through; strain and for every pint of juice measure a pint of sugar, put the fruit-juice on to boil and the sugar on a pan in an open oven to heat. Let the juice boil twenty-five minutes, skimming as needed. Then stir in the sugar, which should be very hot, and boil five minutes longer. If the sugar was thoroughly heated, five minutes' boiling will be sufficient, but it will be best to test it before pouring out, by trying a little on a spoon. If the juice jellies as the spoon is turned from side to side it is done.—Rural New Yorker.

—It is claimed by some Germans who have had experience, that the cow is more gentle and docile than the ox; that, taken young, they break to the yoke very easily, and, driven in double teams, will do the work on a small farm, without overtaxing their strength or heating their blood; and that a small farm may afford three or more teams of cows, and thus make the work so light as to be almost less than wanted. Then a little dust at the time it becomes offensive in the cow-stable, and a little more in the yard, will keep the cattle healthy and comfortable. The manure is also worth more than that from oxen. Cows are also more economical than oxen, as they require less feed, and will keep in good condition on what would starve oxen. Then, when the cows are too old for work, they are good for beef, while oxen are not. Cows are also more docile than oxen, and are more easily managed. Their gentleness makes them more profitable for the dairy, and they are more easily fattened for the shambles. Their calves are also more valuable than those of oxen. Cows are also more easily kept in winter quarters than oxen, and require less room. Their milk is also more valuable than that of oxen, and they are more profitable in every way. Where a farmer has a large farm, and requires a large force of men, oxen may be more profitable, but for the small farmer, cows are the best.

—Fish should be carefully scaled, cleaned, washed and wiped dry. Rub a little salt in the cavity of the fish, and it will be ready for cooking. Fish may be boiled, fried, broiled, stewed with salt and pepper, dressed with a little oil (which is preferable to butter), and broiled to a nice brown color, the gridiron having been previously well greased, too. For all broiled fish the Maitre d'Hotel sauce is the most delicious sauce we have. Knead cold, fresh butter on a plate, with chopped parsley, pepper, salt and lemon juice. The parsley will be improved by having been scalded. Serve a part of this cold, either under or on top of the fish, and it will melt as the fish is put on the table. Any fish may be baked, but it is better to use only fish which are large enough to admit of stuffing. The force meat may be made very rich and highly seasoned, or quite simple, but in either case use enough oil or butter to put into the fish to prevent its becoming dry. A good-sized fish, when stuffed, will require an hour's baking. In broiling or baking rather large, thick fish, it is well to score or make a few incisions with something pointed, in order to insure thorough cooking, and, in case of baking, a thorough seasoning.

All small fish—and many of the best fish are very small, indeed—are best fried. The advance of small fish is generally half a pound or less for each person. Fish may be delicately fried in fine oil, after having been dipped in milk and then flour, or in very hot grease, after being brushed with the egg and crumbs. Great care should be taken that the pan does not catch fire. To guard against this, fry only a small quantity at a time. Under the head of fried fish I must include soft-shell crabs, than which, in season, no more delicious dish can be placed upon the table. It only takes a moment to cook them after they have been trimmed of the ends of the small legs and the gills taken out. Dip them in eggs well-beaten up (one egg for four crabs), then in powdered crackers, and fry in fat in very hot grease. The most popular French sauce which can be served with small fried fish is the sauce Tartare, which is simply a mayonnaise salad dressing made by beating slowly together the raw yolks of eggs, lemon-juice or vinegar, and salad oil, until it is of a soft, velvety consistency about the thickness of molasses, then adding to its gerkins, capers, chopped very fine, and any other condiments which may be relished, and serving the whole cold in a separate dish.—*L. A Rat's Ride to Death.

A keen-eyed and gray-bearded rat in a Rockville (Conn.) woolen mill had for a long time evaded every device to entrap him; but an expert took the case in hand, and succeeded at last in beguiling him into the trap. When the spring announced that the "old general" was caught, the boys crowded around and peered curiously in at the bright eyes and nervous movements of the old fellow, who was "streaking it" inside. It was decided to give him a ride on a tractor," and if he survived that treatment to let him go. The "extractor" in a woolen mill is a machine used to extract the moisture out of cloth. The process being effected by putting the cloth into a basket that revolves swiftly inside a massive frame-work of iron. So the trap was fixed into the basket and the belt run on.

The trap had scarcely from side to side, but gradually growing steadier as the revolutions became swifter, steadily the speed went up; one, two, three and four minutes elapsed, and still the rat was just see a dark spot in the basket, then there was a sudden jar, and a cry was heard that the trap would fly out. On a sudden impulse the belt was flung off, the brake put on, and the machine stopped. Was "general" dead? Not a bit. He was streaking it forest-and-at the trap, his lively eyes as bright as ever. Once more he took his place in the basket.

It was to be a ride to the death this time—a fast train that would whirr him around at the rate of a mile and a quarter every sixty seconds. The "old general" seemed to have an impression that affairs were coming to a climax, for a despairing squeal was heard as the basket again started up. One minute, two minutes, three minutes, and the basket was whirling around fully seven hundred times to the minute. A steady hum, instead of the squeaking, indicated the high speed. Then the belt was thrown off, and the brake applied. When the machine stopped the "old general" was no more, but he was a painless death, without the agony and distress usually dealt out to vermin. It must be a novel sensation to be whirled around the world at a high rained speed, and I am sorry that I was unable to find whether the effect of the revolving turned the creature's brain or extracted the blood, as the moisture is extracted from the cloth. At any rate the experiment has a suggestive feature.—Cor. Hartford Times.

THE growing of wheat on a large scale in the Argentine Republic has only been carried on two or three years, and yet at last accounts forty vessels were loading in the River Plate with wheat for Europe. The country is fast filling up with emigrants from Italy, France and Germany, and promises soon to be a sharp competitor in grain-shipments with the United States.

A Trick of the Clairvoyants.

In drawing out the facts of personal or family history, clairvoyants do not always ask direct questions, but rather make statements with an implied interrogation, to which the victim, oftentimes entirely unconsciously, responds by word or look or gesture, or perhaps by all three; and, at a later stage of the interview, these secret facts are artfully given back to the victim, who has no recollection of having previously imparted them, and will not believe that he has done so, but professes to believe that he is in the presence of Divinity.

It is not only possible but easy for a practical adept to draw out in this way minute and elaborate details of secret family history. A few years ago, while connected with one of the public institutions of this city, I made a number of experiments in this line. I told the patients afflicted with various forms of nervous and allied disorders not to tell me about their symptoms, nor give me any facts in their cases, but to let me tell them; and then I would proceed to indicate, after the manner of a clairvoyant, the locality of their maladies, and the history of their troubles. In the majority of cases I was successful, and made out the diagnosis to the satisfaction of those to whom my services, and with good reason, for nothing that I could do prevented them from telling me, although I asked them no questions, intentionally and unconsciously, they would guide me at every stage of the interview. By a little practice any one could easily acquire this art; and long study, such as professional clairvoyants bestow upon this subject, develops great skill in this managing and deluding the unwary and non-expert.—Scribner for July.

The Best Remedy Known to Man!

Dr. Clark Johnson having associated himself with Mr. Edwin Eastman, 13 Seneca street, Buffalo, N. Y., Wakamekla, the medicine man of the Comanches is now prepared to lend his aid in the introduction of the wonderful remedy of that tribe.

Wakamekla, the Comanches being a tribe in the Rocky Mountains, and the medicine man of the tribe, is described in the New York Herald of Dec. 23d, 1877, the facts of which are so widely known, and so exactly corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Eastman, that no further particulars will be given here. Let it suffice to say that Wakamekla has given to Mr. Eastman the secret and name (since known to the world as Indian Blood Syrup) of which remedy will be made hereafter. Suffice it to say that Mr. Eastman, while a captive, was compelled to partake of the roots, grains, herbs, bark of the berries of which Wakamekla's compound was made, and is entitled perhaps to receive the same credit as the inventor of the remedy. Mr. Eastman, however, does not claim this, but he professes and feels that the remedy is the same now as when Wakamekla compounded it with his own hands.

Wakamekla, the Medicine Man.

Nothing has been added to the medicine since Wakamekla's time, and nothing can be taken from it without destroying its virtues. Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup possesses varied properties.

It acts upon the Liver.
It acts upon the Kidneys.
It regulates the Bowels.
It purifies the Blood.
It gives tone to the Nervous System.
It promotes Digestion.
It Nourishes, Strengthens and Invigorates.
It carries off the old blood and makes new.
It opens the pores of the skin, and insures healthy perspiration.

It produces a healthy appetite for food, and gives to the system fresh supplies of nourishment.

It is the most powerful blood purifier in the world, and will drive every impurity from the blood.

There are no agents employed in the manufacture and no one is taken into the secret. Dr. Clark Johnson is the agent and inventor, and is only being induced to introduce it to mankind.

Why He Was Insane.

OUR local poet came into the sanctum yesterday with a wild look in his eye, and asked our opinion concerning the correct method of committing suicide. We questioned him, and he finally divulged the cause of his sorrow.

He had sent a poem to a literary paper," said he. "Here is one of the verses," and he handed us a slip of paper which read:

"Twas all my life in sweetly gaze
Into those liquid eyes,
And oft I kissed away my haze
To leave internal sighs.

"Very prouty," said we, in a consoling manner. "There's nothing in that to cause one to feel bad."

"No-o-o," he blubbered, "but this is the way it was printed," and he passed over a printed slip from some newspaper, which ran as follows:

'Twas all my life in sweetly gaze
Into those liquid eyes,
And oft I kissed away my hash
To leave internal sighs.

"That's what's killing me," said he, in a frenzy. "That's what's sucking my life away like a child at an orange. Heaves of infernal size!' Oh! I'm going crazy!' and the poor fellow only stopped to ask for a cigar ere he bolted out the door.—Ann Arbor City Herrick.

A HANDSOME sum ought to fall into the exchequer on the death of Baron Rothschild," says the London World. "He was father of his family in the strictest patriarchal sense. Not a tree could be felled, a bedstead removed, or a coat of paint put on a cottage door on property nominally in his sons' without the express sanction of the Baron. The sons occupied houses and estates by themselves, but the property was the fatherr', and he did not forget it. He was not the man to provide for his sons, as rich men do, during his lifetime. There will, therefore, be succession duty payable on the scale as if Abraham had died, assuming that such troubles as taxes existed in his day."

—The Observer knows of a church in New York City whose pews were rented last year for $13,005, and every cent of the amount was collected without molestation or discount, except about twenty-five dollars, which were delayed a few days, but were perfectly good.

—The Moravian ministers in Colorado lies within a year organized two churches, built one house of worship and a parsonage, bought a church organ, established a Sunday-School and three prayer-meetings, taught three catechism classes and supplied six preaching stations.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has now 9,448 communicants, an increase of 3,140 for the last year, the largest gain in any year since the first except probably the first. Solicitude follow school examinations in England, he said, sometimes sends them in our high schools. Children cannot use the brain more than three hours daily, and that is the limit allowed in school than in Europe. Let us educators then dispense with much of this intense cramming, and have more regard to exercise in our school work are elements of disorder in the health of young pupils.

—Beyond the river Jordan there is a tribe of Arab horsemen, with whom one has been living for many years an Italian priest, who goes with them wherever they go. It is their custom to move about from pasture to pasture, and while they tend their flocks the priest teaches their children in holy things. When a new camp is formed a tent is set up, which serves as a chapel. During Holy Week the tribe encamps on the banks of the Jordan, and the priest makes a pilgrimage to Jerusalem on horseback, entering the city like a Bedouin warrior, armed cap-a-pie, to defend himself against the Mohammedans. He celebrates Holy Thursday and Good Friday in Jerusalem, receives the holy oils from the Greco Monastery, and on Holy Saturday returns to his followers in the wilderness, there to celebrate with them the Easter festival. It is said by Catholics that these Arabs are a devout and noble people.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

CROESUS.

My little Charlie said to me
That he had lots of riches;
"How much old man?" said I. Said he,
"Two fortunes in my breeches.

A silver fourpence in my purse,
And one French bit in money
That, indeed, is though to possess
With those gray eyes what I should do
On hearing of such bonanza.

With those gray eyes he looked at me,
Ere he resumed his parley,
It was as plain as A, B, C,
Plainer, perhaps, in Charlie!

That weighty matters were not one
We scarcely need to tell us;
"And, Father," Charlie said, "are you
As rich a man as I am?"

And I replied—the while I drew
My arm around his shoulders—
Quite truly, I am sure, I said,
Because I'm sore older.

OTHER MOTHERS.

Mother, in the sunset glow,
Crooning that old song of yours and low,
Lines self-seeming, heart at rest,
Hands clasped, head upon my breast,

Thinkest thou of those that weep
O'er their babies fast asleep
Whose last words were "Mother, kiss me!"
On their tender coverlet.

Whose cold cradle is the grave,
Where with rose and lily wave,
Calling for their blossoms fair
Wind and storm—not any care?

Mother, crooning soft and low,
Let not little thoughts go,
Let not little thoughts go,
Let them with us be like skies
Of the darling's happy eyes.

Count the baby's every breath,
As a sweet soul-incense rare,
Rest on some fair angel's gold
Let's tender prayer be told.

For the mothers, all above,
Who for singing nakeds moan
Under lily-fields of snow,
Where the wind is never warm.

CHEERFUL HARRY.

Whenever Eel River Dan went on a "tear," consternation reigned in Pilot City. As soon as his stubborn whoop began to resound through the air and echo around the village the citizens hushed their murmurings at lesser evils, and silently sculled to their cabins. There to listen, with bated breath, for the first sounds of warfare sure to follow Dan's arrival in the town. Oftentimes the gulleless stranger, unacquainted with the truculent ruffian's "record," was the victim; but as a general rule it was seen that Jacob Leberman, who sacrificed himself for more timidly men. It was a singular fact that, no matter how peaceably disposed the Pilot City might be, at the moment Eel River Dan came down from his mountain home "on a time," somebody had to suffer.

He was "that" in the most literal sense of the word, and there were but few who dared approach him after he had "declared" himself and "turned himself loose." But on this particular occasion—the bleak, windy day in February, when the principal inhabitants of Pilot City had gathered around the glowing stove that warmed the somewhat contracted limits of the Rattsman's home—the jolly chatting congregation had received no intimation of the approach of the mountain desperado. Not a single word had been uttered as he strode through the sighing pines, not a yell announcing his coming had been heard by the peaceful residents of Pilot City, and when the gigantic frame of the "terror" darkened the door of the home, a thunderbolt would not have produced a more genuine surprise, not to say terror, than did the appearance of the dreaded Eel River Dan. For an instant the assemblage sat petrified. Then there was a fluttering movement, and Big Mike, the boss, found, under a break for the rear door. The others only waited to satisfy themselves that Dan was "on" bent on mischief. His imported doubt having been dissipated, and the conclusion arrived at that the mountaineer was in an unusually "ugly" frame of mind, the remainder of the company withdrew—rather precipitately, it must be confessed—but with sufficient order and regularity to escape injury in the crush at the side door.

As soon as the last boot heel had passed over the threshold Dan smiled—it was not a very agreeable smile, to be sure, but notwithstanding its sardonic character there was something interesting for a brown or a scowl of displeasure. With the grimness still irradiating his bloated features the desperado passed behind the bar, and with a freedom peculiar to his lofty habits, grasped the demijohn containing an unusually ardent article of lumberman's solace. Throwing the jug deftly into the hollow of his right arm, he poured the yellow disflument into a glass which he held in his left hand, allowing the liquid to mark four fingers before he threw the muzzle up and returned the demijohn to its shelf beneath the bar. He contemplated the contents of the glass for a moment, held it up to the light, smacked his lips in anticipation of the joy it was about to confer upon him, and then placed the edge of the tumbler gingerly to his mouth as if he would prolong the delight of feeling it trickle down his copper-plated throat into his sheet-iron stomach. Inch by inch his ruby nose went upward, drop by drop the whisky flowed downward. The last globule had just passed between his teeth, when his fiery red eyes glancing through the bottom of the glass, fell upon an object, the sight of which seemed to paralyze him. He could not believe his senses. He imagined that some defect in the glass through which he was taking his observations must have produced the vision that greeted his gaze. It could not possibly be the form of a man standing there beside the stove! What an idea! What mortal individual would have the hardihood to remain when he, Eel River Dan, the terror of the entire hunter region from Menominee to Trinity, saw fit to enter a place of resort! Ah! no, it certainly could not be a real, living flesh and blood human being. It was probably a straw dummy set up by those cursed folks that had just left, and the insult this offered would afford an excuse for a general cleaning out of the whole infernal town.

So he placed the glass on the bar, and leaning upon his elbows, leveled his gaze still more intently upon that "dummy." Great Cæsar's ghost! it moved. Was it the wind swaying a bundle of clothes stuffed with straw? Or was it—. By the great Sioux that swings over the river Jordan! Never before, during 5 career checkered by almost daily surprises, had Eel River Dan ever experienced such a sudden shock of astonishment. For ten months by the bar-room clock he was peculiarly subjected to "Sandy-Sickness" and three prayer-meetings, taught three catechism classes and supplied six preaching stations.

The Reformed Episcopal Church has now 9,448 communicants, an increase of 3,140 for the last year, the largest gain in any year since the first except probably the first. There are 8,000 children in the Sunday-Schools, and 1,000 ushers. Fifteen new congregations were added last year, and six new church buildings were opened.

The Archbishop of Canterbury sees in the younger clergy "a growing feeling of the great importance of setting a good example" in the matter of temperance "to those whom they are called upon to teach. The number of young men who abstain altogether" from intoxicating beverages "without any pledge, because they think that thereby they are doing good to those whom they can influence, is yearly increasing."

—Prof. Hitchcock, of Amherst College, lately told his students that brain work, properly engaged in, was healthful to them, and that the brain might ,only be overworked. Solicitude follow school examinations in England, he said, sometimes sends them in our high schools. Children cannot use the brain more than three hours daily, and that is the limit allowed in school than in Europe. Let us educators then dispense with much of this intense cramming, and have more regard to exercise in our school work are elements of disorder in the health of young pupils.

Beyond the river Jordan there is a tribe of Arab horsemen, with whom one has been living for many years an Italian priest, who goes with them wherever they go. It is their custom to move about from pasture to pasture, and while they tend their flocks the priest teaches their children in holy things. When a new camp is formed a tent is set up, which serves as a chapel. During Holy Week the tribe encamps on the banks of the Jordan, and the priest makes a pilgrimage to Jerusalem on horseback, entering the city like a Bedouin warrior, armed cap-a-pie, to defend himself against the Mohammedans. He celebrates Holy Thursday and Good Friday in Jerusalem, receives the holy oils from the Greco Monastery, and on Holy Saturday returns to his followers in the wilderness, there to celebrate with them the Easter festival. It is said by Catholics that these Arabs are a devout and noble people.

"Whenever Eel River Dan went on a "tear," consternation reigned in Pilot City. As soon as his stubborn whoop began to resound through the air and echo around the village the citizens hushed their murmurings at lesser evils, and silently sculled to their cabins. There to listen, with bated breath, for the first sounds of warfare sure to follow Dan's arrival in the town. Oftentimes the gulleless stranger, unacquainted with the truculent ruffian's "record," was the victim; but as a general rule it was seen that Jacob Leberman, who sacrificed himself for more timidly men. It was a singular fact that, no matter how peaceably disposed the Pilot City might be, at the moment Eel River Dan came down from his mountain home "on a time," somebody had to suffer.

He was "that" in the most literal sense of the word, and there were but few who dared approach him after he had "declared" himself and "turned himself loose." But on this particular occasion—this bleak, windy day in February, when the principal inhabitants of Pilot City had gathered around the glowing stove that warmed the somewhat contracted limits of the Rattsman's home—the jolly chatting congregation had received no intimation of the approach of the mountain desperado. Not a single word had been uttered as he strode through the sighing pines, not a yell announcing his coming had been heard by the peaceful residents of Pilot City, and when the gigantic frame of the "terror" darkened the door of the home, a thunderbolt would not have produced a more genuine surprise, not to say terror, than did the appearance of the dreaded Eel River Dan. For an instant the assemblage sat petrified. Then there was a fluttering movement, and Big Mike, the boss, found, under a break for the rear door. The others only waited to satisfy themselves that Dan was "on" bent on mischief. His imported doubt having been dissipated, and the conclusion arrived at that the mountaineer was in an unusually "ugly" frame of mind, the remainder of the company withdrew—rather precipitately, it must be confessed—but with sufficient order and regularity to escape injury in the crush at the side door.

As soon as the last boot heel had passed over the threshold Dan smiled—it was not a very agreeable smile, to be sure, but notwithstanding its sardonic character there was something interesting for a brown or a scowl of displeasure. "Somethin' o' that kind—I wasn't particular anxious to hustle 'round an' find out, myself.

"I b'lieve yer lyin', stranger; but afore I perceed any further 'ith your case, I'll give ye the true business; then you kin act accordin' to what I say. I 'cause they are ina comin' in that yar door over thar—see the door?"

"It's there, I reckon," answered the little man, who had turned his back to the stove, but who did not take the trouble to resume his former position for the purpose of verifying the bad man's assertion that such door absolutely existed in that particular side of the apartment.

"Well, my consumptive friend, 'taint too late for you to use that same hole in the wall—you'll be in time to hear how that dog fight you was speakin' about come out, mebbe, if yer uncommonly lively."

"Don't keer how it come out," answered the hollow-cheeked individual, in his most woe-be-gone tone of voice.

"Don't, eh? Yer sure ye don't want to know which dog licked?"

"Ain't bettin' a continental red on nary dog fight just now, an' ain't a goin' to, nuther."

There was a ghost of emphasis in the latter portion of this speech, but it was almost wholly choked by the gloomy address of the tone in which it was uttered.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Barnard—Banks—Torch Lake—Central Lake—Clover and Plaster.

Barnes Sentinel.

A short time since we had made a hasty tour of inspection along the state road south of Charlevoix. Passing the telegraph poles a farm on Atwood's [illegible] Our first halt was at Barnard, where we found a well-settled neighborhood, with a few [illegible] houses, one mill and a number of well improved farms. We were hospitably entertained by Mr. Boron from whence and pond we made rearward a few miles [illegible] Clover is the principal [illegible] Those who go there [illegible] and plaster freely will succeed, other things being equal, while those who do not will fail, as a rule.

In Banks we found everywhere tokens of enterprise and prosperity. For a new country we doubt if it is excelled any where in Northern Michigan. It does [illegible] road to most and the hilly farmers at Messrs Knight, Jutzi, Hayward, Byers, Beach, Maxinal and a host of others. And when every farmer in Banks adopts the use of clover and plaster a much greater prosperity will be attained. There are the facilities that will make the desert to become a fruitful land. At this writing many members of the party are [illegible] that they had been liberally plastered early last spring. Plaster is cheap and farmers cannot afford to neglect its use. The same is true of clover, but both go hand in hand together in order to make a success. More on subject in a future article.

One of the most pleasant incidents of our tour was a sail on Torch Lake, on the beautiful side-wheel steamer Queen of the Lakes, Captain Johnson. This is a magnificent body, but, especially larger and more expensive than is at present demanded. However, it speaks well for the enterprise of its proprietors, Messrs. Dexter and Noble, and is a credit to the route. Capt. Johnson is a Mexican by birth and came under the protection of the American flag in the time of Gen'l Taylor's campaign in Mexico. The Charlevoix people will remember him as the commander of the "Skinny Side" at the time she was wrecked at their place in the fall of '78. We do not hesitate to say that a more genial and accommodating captain cannot be found on our Northern waters. He owns a good farm in Peninsula township and believes in clover and plaster.

After our excursion on Torch Lake we were invited by Mr. W. C. Byers, of Banks, to take a ride after his mules, over to Central Lake, to indulge in a little sporting. We were glad of an opportunity to see that place, and to be able to call upon Rev. Mr. Coulter, late pastor of the Presbyterian church at Banks. Mr. Coulter has a homestead of 160 acres one mile east of the village. It is an unbroken tract of land, but still mucky, in time, a good dairy farm. It is well watered, and within a short [illegible] cheese and plaster will come quite productive. Mr. and Mrs. Coulter have an interesting family of ten children, mostly boys, and they have displayed excellent judgement in securing a home where their children may learn habits of industry.

Central Lake is [illegible] but a small village, but it boasts of [illegible] and [illegible] think we think in due time quite a town. We regretted not meeting the principal proprietor of the place, Mr. Jas. Wadsworth, as he was away on business at Elk Rapids, but we saw the "better half" and their lively children. The country about Central Lake is fast opening up, but the soil is rather light, yet with a liberal use of clover and plaster will become productive.

On Friday last, Aug. 1st, the flags and lights for Cooper on Signal Station arrived and orders came to prepare to display signals.

There are many of our readers who [illegible] do not know the practical workings or the benefits of this service. It is under the control of the War Department, and under the management of he who has come to be generally called "Old Probs Illinois" Gen. Myers, Chief of the Signal service.

The Cautionary Signal Service, United States Armament red flag with black square in the centre by day and a red light by night displayed at the office observer, and other prominent places throughout the city, signifies

1. That from the information had at the central office in Washington, a probability of severe or dangerous weather has been declared to the port or place at which the Cautionary Signal is displayed, or in that vicinity.

2. That the danger appears to be so great on its demand prevention on the part of navigators and others interested, such as an examination of vessels or other structures to be endangered in a storm, the inspection of rigging, &c., and several precautions for rough weather.

3. It calls for frequent examination of local barometers and other instruments, by ship masters, or others interested, and the study of the local signs of the weather or clouds, &c. By these means those who are expert may often be confirmed as to the need of the precautions to which the Cautionary Signal calls attention, or may determine that the danger is overestimated or past.

Nonesuch is to be blessed with the administrations of one of the disciples of Mrs. Ellen G. White, or as they call themselves, Seventh Day Adventists.

A beautiful tent has been already erected, and soon we shall probably hear an elucidation of the truth as seen by Mrs. White.

The Good Templars of this place seem to be flourishing finely. We understand they initiated six candidates Tuesday evening last. The following are the officers elect for the coming quarter:

R. C. T.—John Muirhead.
R. V. C.—Mrs. Annie Stafford.
R. S.—Minnie Harris.
W. F. S.—Oscar Wing.
W. M.—John Smith.
R. H. S.—Arthur Marsh.
R. W. G.—Fred Olney.
P. R. C. T.—H. P. Blake.

Base Ball.—A party consisting of Hon. S. M. Cross, of the place, Prof. E. E. Fish and Mr. J. A. Kennedy, of Buffalo, Prof. Villiar Bunell, of Indiana, and the editor of this paper, with Mr. A. Gage, of Grand Rapids as chaperone, went up to Newland's lake, in Marion, Wednesday, on a fishing expedition and a right merry time we had of it. Well-filled dinner baskets, and the dinner hour spent in the cool shade of a lakeside grove, with joke, and story, was the most enjoyable part of it—at least to us. Major Green caught the first bass—a fine three-pounder, and the woods reverberated with the yell as the game was brought into the boat. Prof. Fish and his friend Kennedy spent most of the time wandering through the woods in search of specimens in botany and general botany, in both of which Prof. Fish is an ardent student and connoisseur. The fish captured could be easily contained in a wash-tub—that is a small wash-tub; but the actual fun and enjoyment experienced, could not be contained in a bagsland. (We hope a proper construction will be placed upon this last statement.) We were granted to note the good signs all along the road. The Newland neighborhood abounds in good crops, and everything looks well. We shall visit this section again.

THE JORDAN

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Dear Sir.—Your readers living up to this beautiful country cannot imagine the pleasure which which the denizens of the heated cities, had the while guzzled Pleasure City Boiler, but we were bound up Jordan, for some time touring, every one had doubts on the matter, so we started, taking the fast steamer Nellie Booth, thus proved the journey was very pleasant, and the jumping up Jordan is fearful to remember. Peace two nothing, perspiring mortals, hoping, hanging, expecting, that every thing was Welcome. The twin miles seemed like five, and never did two poor wretches feel anything with more pleasure than we did, the bridge and landing at Wetmore's, but we were sure of dinner, for the "Sea Greek" for the dinner at Webster's had been contracted for our return. After a little rest and dinner, we were ready for the fray. We were not greenhorns in the art, on the contrary, both of us claimed to be fishermen. We found a hospitable cave of Mrs. Webster. We found a party of Chicago friends there. As ironical, the others were enthusiastic, the ladies really being better fishermen than the gentlemen, but they seemed to enjoy themselves to the top of their bent. They were a party, grand party, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Sumner Ellsley the famous Rev. Dr. Thomas of the Methodist church, with their ladies.—C. E. Kirby Esq., and wife, J. H. Mayer, Esq., and wife, Mr. John Wilkie, son of Frank R. Wilkie of the Chicago Times, and Mr. Horace Thomas. They are staying up in this region for their summer vacation, and are finely enclosed with this Northern country. They were intensely pleased with the ride down Jordan and found out that in spite of the cleanses

A CHICAGO TRAGEDY.

Two Sisters, in a Fit of Mental Despondency, Make Elaborate Preparations to Take Their Own Lives, and Then Skillfully Bang Themselves.

A shocking tragedy was wrought in the elegant three-story residence on Langley street, in the village of Hyde Park, near Chicago, a few nights ago. The house was occupied by three maiden sisters, named Elizabeth, Anna and Nona Fairbridge. They were forty-three, forty and thirty years old, respectively. Brought up to a life of luxury, they found themselves unable to face a life of privation, rendered inevitable, as they thought, by the failure or antiquated failure of their resources, and decided to vex success of sorrow by passing unbidden to the great hereafter. They talked the matter over and all agreed, after a season of prayer, to put a period to their troubles. At the supreme moment the courage of the two younger failed, and she concluded to ensure for a time the evils she knew rather than encounter those possibly in store for her. After she had shuffled off her human integuments. The two elder sisters remained firmly fixed in their intention of leaving the world which had caused them so much trouble. As the afternoon settled into night they made their ghastly preparations, and robed themselves in white. After this they read the Sermon on the Mount and kneeled to pray. Then they closed the blinds, nailed up the windows, and drove two spikes in the wall, one just over the door of the sliding blinds on the other in a similar place above the open double doors of the connecting parlors. Here was another pray. They the three embraced and Nona retired to her chamber above. There she lay sobbing and moaning like one bereft of reason, the poor girl sat until nine o'clock. She listened with that sense of the horrible upon her which in her case was unique. She knew the preparations, heard the chairs taken out of place, heard the chairs placed, heard closing protests, and then came silence—silence awful and torturing. She went down stairs and saw the ominous sight she expected to see—two lovely sisters hanging limp and inanimate from ropes tied to the spikes driven in above the doors. Two chairs lay beneath them and an open bible upon the center-table. The youngest fell fainting to the floor. But merciful oblivion was not long granted to her, and she awoke again. She crawled to where they hung, and in piteous accents, tried to call them back to life. Neighbors heard the wailing and entered, cut down the strangled forms and laid them tenderly upon a couch to await the Coroner's inquest.

The inquest was held next day, and Nona, the surviving sister, made the following statement to the Coroner:

"My mother has been dead about twenty-five years, and my father, Alva Trowbridge, lived at Newport, R. I. My father married second wife about three years after mother's death, by whom he had one daughter, Ida. My mother left some property to my sisters and myself by will when she died. Shortly after we were left an orphan father died, and the courts became my guardian, as I was a minor.

"My sisters and I lived at home with my father until about two years ago, when we felt that we must have some of our property to live on. We accordingly did, and father married our two sisters soon after to get out of their hands. They were then hundred dollars each. They then went to keeping house for themselves, and at that time we commenced to have trouble with our brothers-in-law. They claimed that the rental commission on the property belonging to us was too high, and they wanted us to reduce it. I refused to do so, and they left us. We then moved into the house we now occupy, and have been living here ever since. We have had no trouble with our brothers-in-law, and have not spoken to them since they left us. We have been very much troubled in mind for some time past, and have been under the care of Dr. Hall. I have been to him about twice a week for the past month. I have been taking medicine from him, but I do not know what it was. I have been very much depressed for some time past, and have been under the influence of liquor for about two weeks. I have been drinking whisky and beer. I have been drinking about a pint of whisky and a quart of beer per day. I have been drinking for about two weeks. I have been drinking about the same amount of whisky and beer for about two weeks. I have been drinking about the same amount of whisky and beer for about two weeks. I have been drinking about the same amount of whisky and beer

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 5, - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Getting their Eyes Opened.

The Philadelphia Times, which is among the ablest Democratic and newspapers, says of the recent confederate amusement-delineation hullabaloo at Winchester, Virginia:

All the south has to do to make the coming of Grant as certain as any event in the future, is to get up a few more Winchester celebrations, enlist a few more rebel flags and have a few more orators and the country how patronize a movement the rebellion was, and has gained a thing the south attempted when it shouted to exultation its cannibals war, the nobler government of the world. Whenever at the next general election it comes to choose somebody president whose election shall settle the fact that three lags been a war and that the government wasn't exactly overthrown, the name of that president will be Ulysses S. Grant. It is generally believed that he knows something about the final issue of the contest, and people won't get cross-eyed looking over the field to see which side was victor and which side vanquished, if they can have Grant in the presidential chair when front fight for is soldered spikes.

Whether the Republican nominee for president next year is Grant or some other enlisted Republican, such confederate Democratic performances as that at Winchester, tend to insure the election of the Republican ticket.

The New York World has the following to say as regards our national bank system: "As a matter of fact, the people of the country at large are better pleased with the national banking system now than they were three years ago, or two years ago, or a year ago. There are doubtless, points in which the system needs reform and improvement, but as a whole it is an excellent working system. Secures for the note-holder and the depositor is nearly perfect under it? Since the Bank of Glasgow failure the experience of the American system has become so apparent that British opinion demands, in the new banking legislation of parliament, the same banking publicity which is the great merit of our plan. The treasury does power which all publicans feel that the national banks, if they were united—as they are not—could wield in the struggle of 1880, has no fear of late to make even the party managers rather shy of playing with such dangerous dynamite.

During the war of the rebellion, a Dr. Luke P. Blackburn, a southern confederate refugee, went to Washington five trunks of clothing, boasted he had used by yellow fever patients, to be sold by a commission house in that city. The object of this old clothes business was to introduce yellow fever into northern cities. The scheme was worthy of the mind who originated it, but it failed. Now, one Dr. Luke P. Blackburn is running as Democratic candidate for Governor of Kentucky. The Cincinnati Gazette is trying by a series of vigorous thrusts to elicit the first whether any Democratic paper in Kentucky knows of this Dr. Blackburn is that Dr. Blackburn or not, but they are all either too ignorant or too modest to reply.

The Indianapolis Journal thinks that the Democratic party should be called the Nullification party in the future, because their advocacy of the doctrine of State Rights, and attempt to nullify laws they cannot get repealed, doubly entitle the party to that name.

The Shawsneen American says: "If any Democrat says that his party in Congress is in favor of fair elections, just remind him that every Democratic Senator voted against Senator Blaine's amendment nothing is a crime for a man to appear alone near a voting place bearing arms. If there's ridicule, under it offered, that will silence him."

If the present indications shall be fulfilled, the country will have a larger grain production than ever before in its history. With a shortage in Europe, at least fair prices are assured, and the financial effect must necessarily be good. The great harvests of 1879 will go far towards giving us general prosperity in 1880.

All purchasers who are not already advised, will be interested in the following notice sent from the Department of the Interior at Washington, "By virtue of an Act of Congress, approved June 22, 1879, the biennial examination of invalid pensioners is abolished from that day.

Gen. Sheridan, on the return to Birmingham, received a grand ovation and returned thanks in a few remarks, which, by reason of his inflexible voice, were only partly audible.

Occasionally when northern daughters Democratic papers accuse the Oakdom Southern States of working in the interest of the Republicans, that lively Confederate sheet brings them up with a round turn. The following is a case in point:

"We regard the reconstruction acts—so called—of Congress as usurpations and unconstitutional, revolutionary and void." Sayings of the Oakdom States, the only known Republican paper in Mississippi—Jackson (Ms.) Sentinel, Bastard Democrat.

"Why, you lovely rose of Sharon, the passage that you quote is not ours at all, at all. It is a resolution taken from the Democrat federal platform of 1856—the platform on which Horatio Seymour ran for President of the United States. Now get out into your back yard, and cuss your consummate stupidity for twenty-seven minutes by the town clock, you sublime, majestic ass. Git.

The Spectacle of our Democratic paper accusing another of working for the Republicans because it quotes approvingly a paragraph from a Democratic National platform, is very funny, to say the least.

Geo. Harper, the editorial-in-chief of the Oakdom (Miss.) "Southern States," is about to enter the lecture field. The subject matters of his lectures are not announced.

The Coming Man.

The Hon. E. Burk Dale, the editor of the Jackson Clarion, the state organ of the Mississippi Democracy, has been named for the U. S. Senate to succeed Mr. Bovey, the present colored Republican occupant. For since Jefferson Davis has come to flat from as the Lost Cause efficient for the senatorial toga, Mr. Burks, Dale, in a letter to a friend, more unanimously waives his claims:

"I will thank you to say that it is impossible for me to be an opponent of Mr. Davis, or to antagonize the wish of friends who may desire to return him to the Senate. Recognizing the overwhelmingness of his merits, and realizing that he ranks all others in the hearts of the people he has served so long and faithfully, and for whom he has suffered vicariously, I will not permit my name to be used for the senate if he should consent to be returned to that important office."

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens of oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often does the majority of people feel like giving it up in despair, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Brown's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint is the direct cause of seventy five per cent. of such maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Constipation, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the head, Palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale at Dr. G. W. Cramer's.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Lost or Stolen.

May 7, 1879 two orders belonging to Kate C. Cooper, drawn in the Township of Wilson, District No. 3, county of Charlevoix, and dated April 1, 1879. One fourteen dollar order and one twenty-seven dollar order with a seventeen dollar endorsement on it. All persons are forbidden to purchase said orders.

KATE C. COOPER.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

The Nellie Beach, Captain Attorney A. Bland Soldier—Etc. Etc.

A fine morning was it, we took it on the Nellie Beath, Captain H. E. Aldrich, for a little airing on the lake. The Nellie Beath is owned by Messrs. Bartholomew, Aldrich and Soe, and has recently been refitted and furnished with a new boiler and other appliances, making it one of the finest steamers of its kind in Northern Michigan. It is a very great convenience to the public to have a second boat on Round Lake, as its distance was so great alone to meet the demand. Both are owned locally, as well as understanding accessible to the growing wants of the country along above Charlevoix.

We had landed at the residence of our old friend Mr. Bartel Holmes Pierce, who is one of the oldest settlers in the country. It was our pleasure to know him and his parents in the autumn of the year, when we were both younger than at present. The parents were our friends, as a period when friendship implied something more than empty words. After a little chat with the family, which consisted of a noble wife, three lovely children and a very fine table dog, we took leaving, but the weather was not enough to make a fish purpose and as were horribly annoyed of the old definition of angling, a rod with a line and hook at one end, and a mud at the other." Mr. Pierce has made his place one of the finest summer in the county.

We walked back upon the line from one of the Rev. Hon. Wilkinson, from which we had a delightful view up and across the lake. After a hospitable dinner we resumed our for Advance, where we got to hear most pleasantly. We were met at the dock by Mr. W. H. Porter, one of the principal proprietor of the town, who extended to us all the courtesies within the reach of his "outdoor." Mr. Porter has recently built, by the recommendation of the customers of his grist mill, a commodious barn, where their teams may be sheltered from storms and cold, while they are waiting for their grists. A very wise and benevolent provision. He has a nice road of his own, extending from his mills to the beautiful new residence, which was handsomer upon it, with which he can wheel himself and his friends to all homes, and back again, at night, pantheder sure.

We had the pleasure of an introduction to Messrs. Hayward Bendle, of the proprietor of a well filled dry goods and dog store. We also enjoyed the acquaintance of Mr. P. H. Norton but did not find the enterprising proprietor at home.

Advance has a hotel kept by Mr. Chas. Hilker, which, when completed, will be a credit to the place. His terms are found are very reasonable, being 50 cents per day, or $3 per week. Landlord Hilker has the misfortune to be quite deaf, being a boarder upon it, with which he can wheel himself and his friends to all homes, and back again, at night, pantheder sure.

FOREST FIRES.—During the past week tremendous fires have been raging in the woods north of this village. A large quantity of posts and fuel belonging to L. B. Bartholomew, valued at over $250, have been destroyed.

SIDEWALKS.—Sidewalk building is now fairly under way. The walks on the south side of Maine, and the west side of State streets are nearly completed, and that on the north side of Clinton is progressing. No class of improvements are so generally beneficial to a village as sidewalk building.

DRAMATIC READING.—Miss DuBoisseau, of London England, gave an entertainment at the M. E. Church, in this village, on Wednesday evening, consisting of select readings. Miss DuBoisseau possesses rare attainments as a reader. The entertainment was enlivened by valuable musical assistance from the Professor Bazzell.

WHEAT CROP.—Mr. W. A. Wightman, of Evart, Mich., who with his family, has been temporarily residing here for some time, was on Friday removed to Kalamazoo Insane Asylum. Mr. Wightman has been in frail health for some time, and on Tuesday last demonstrated unmistakable symptoms of insanity. He continued to grow worse, requiring constant attention, when on Thursday his brother was telegraphed for, and arrived here Friday. In company with this terrible disease before.

EXTENSION THE ROAD.—Preparations for commencing the grading of the Bay View, Little Traverse and Mackinac Railroad between Little Traverse and Bay View, are being made with all speed. The side or grade stakes are being set by Chief Engineer M. M. Stimpson, who has completed the survey, and he reports that the grade will be very easy; not over two feet of cross cutting or filling will be required anywhere on this section of the road. The continuation of the line north of Mackinac is a very superior route—through the very best territory—and the road when completed will add greatly to the advancement of Emmet county.

We refer to the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet, the second north of the first, and the third north of the second. The first has a splendid water front on Traverse Bay, and the other two on Lake Michigan. . . . Emmet this year will harvest 20,000 bushels of wheat, where she grew in 1875 only 1,200 bushels. . . . Charlevoix, south of Emmet is another coming county with equal advantages for summer tourists. She first only as a sect of peculiar habits, small and despised, they grew in numbers, and commanded increasing respect, until at last a Christian emperor sat upon the throne, ruling the whole civilized world, have far-off China.

More than fifteen centuries and a half ago, the emperor Constantine issued a decree by which "the time honored Sunday" (venerabilis dies solis,) was made a legal holiday. No summons could be issued, no court could sit, no business could be carried on, no work could be done on that day." An exception was made in favor of the rural districts only, where a man might quietly cultivate his fields whenever he pleased. These the old religion retained its hold the longest, in fact which is perpetuated in our word paysan. In Latin that word (paganus) meant only a peasant. From that day to this, wherever European civilization has penetrated, and that means wherever the white race has carried the time-honored Sunday. The government of the United States refrains from official acts on that day. In the rare cases when Congress has remained in session, it has been covered up and left without legal evidence by not adjourning Saturday night, so that its transactions appear in the minutes as having been done in Saturday's session. All the states except Louisiana have laws for the protection of the day. Our own Compiled Laws contain the following section (Chap. 357, §(1961) Sec. 1. No person shall keep open his shop, warehouses, or workhouse, or shall do any manner of labor, business or work, except only works of necessity and charity, or be present at any dancing, or at any public diversion, show or entertainment, or take part in any sport, game or play, on the first day of the week."

If time and space allowed, it could be shown not only by good reasons but also by historical and geographical facts, that the observance of the day is important—yea, essential—for the welfare of a community. Our legislators had time to consider the matter fully, and their deliberations resulted in the conviction that this observance ought to be maintained by the sanctions of the law. Every consideration, both of religion and good citizenship should induce us to have nothing to do, with any expansion or other diversion on the first day of the week. Geo. W. Woon.

A Few Words on the Sabbath.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

We need greatly to heed the plea presented not long ago by your "Christian," for the more general observance of the Sabbath. The subject is important, and may well be kept before the public.

Some three or more centuries ago, while the Israelite people were encamped in the Sinai Peninsula, the laws of their nation and the rites of their religion were given them by their Divine sovereign through their leader, Moses. But first "God spake all the words," proclaiming himself amid the thunders of Mt. Sinai a brief code of ten commandments enacted for them not as Israelites merely, but as men, applicable to mankind in all countries and in every age, not defining their duties as citizens of a particular state, but laying down the universal principles of duty to God in the first four, to parents in the fifth, and to all men in the rest. In it's code we read, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Though all these ages one day in seven has been kept as a day of sacred rest and public worship.

Eighteen centuries and a half ago, Jesus the crucified rose from his tomb early on the morning of the first day of the week, and met his assembled disciples, whose mourning was now turned into joy. Ever since that time Sunday has been generally known as the Lord's day. Subjects of a heathen government, some of them slaves of the heathen masters, living in a society whose holidays were idolatrous festivals, the Christians generally observed their weekly day, meeting before dawn and after dark, where they could not during the hours of daylight. Known at first only as a sect of peculiar habits, small and despised, they grew in numbers, and commanded increasing respect, until at last a Christian emperor sat upon the throne, ruling the whole civilized world, have far-off China.

OUR RAINY LETTER.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The fears of yellow fever, which have been in some measure justified by the occurrence of isolated cases, both in Brooklyn and New York, are quite an injury in some quarters in a business point of view. The quarantine regulations are very stringent, and the owners of steamers running to Havana are complaining bitterly. They say it costs them $300 extra to a steamer in the season as they are now required to do. At the same time some people are so anxious to distinguish themselves, or an reckless on account of their sufferings by hard times, that applications by the score have made for the positions of nurse at Memphis and other infected places down South, mainly by unacclimated persons, and the days of news editors of the great daily newspapers are made a burden to them by reason of the swarms of correspondents who are multitudes to write the current history of the epidemic which, unfortunately for them, perhaps, does not seem yet to have arrived, and which we devoutly hope will not arrive, even for the benefit of our more or less regular brethren of the quill. The heat has been quite severe for some days, and while there seems to be a less average of sun-strokes for human victims, the horses have suffered abnormally, and and several have fallen down in a regular apoplectic way in Broadway every day.

The pioneer gospellers, Moody and Sankey, are again with us after a season of recuperation, the latter in Europe, the former at that charming country residence at Northfield, Mass., which has so mysteriously come into his possession, he being one of those good people who work very hard and get no pay for their services. They are holding forth at Cooper Institute, Sankey singing as sweetly and Moody speaking as volubly and as ungrammatically as ever. The burden of his discourses is as usual to lay all our burdens upon Jesus. Logically this would seem encouragement to business and general shiftlessness, in fact, not differing much from the fatality doctrines of the Turks. The terrible heat in the ill-ventilated hall has not prevented the assembling of the enthusiasm over the conventions who are excited by the surroundings to stand up in the face of the multitude and ask for prayers is very great. The clergy of various denominations seem to have lost interest in the evangelists.

The gyroscopical Talmage, while absent in the flesh still exercises the spirits of his Brooklyn flock and a vast number of outsiders. His movements have, with more or less reticence, been telegraphed at considerable length by his showmen—business managers in England, and whether true or simply as a dexterous advertising dodge it is now asserted that he has so charmed the Englishmen with the eloquence of his convoluting arms, legs, hair, ears and jaw that his own people will be left to seek some other attraction. Some who profess to know all about it even go so far as to say the thing was cut and dried long ago, and that immediately at the close of the trial on "common time," Talmage and a London theatre manager made terms by cable for a three years' starring tour.

The current number of Harper's Weekly contains an article on the recent doings of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, which embody some remarkable facts and figures. It shows among other things that during 1878 the company paid out to the survivors of its policyholders the enormous sum of three and a half millions of dollars, and practically accounts for this immense business by thus explaining the nature of the institution.

"For those who only want insurance it may be interesting to learn that the Mutual Life is a company of individuals all insuring each other, the new comer and the old being on one footing. There is no question of stock or proprietary interest of the stock-holders of a corporation standing up to absorb or control the common interest. The measure of that interest has now attained a magnitude in millions, some twenty-five per cent. greater than all the capital of the banks of the metropolis, being in the aggregate eighty-seven millions of dollars. It is the largest financial corporation known to exist, its policies outstanding assuring life insurance equal to amount the entire issue of the national bank currency afloat."

The constant increase of this incomparable success is still further accounted for by the reduction of premium rates which the Mutual put in force something like a year ago, and which enables it to give insurance of the most unquestioned safety at the lowest known figures.

Poverty and the willingness to run heavy risks for light gain have caused the death, or, at any rate, the asphyxiation of a brave man. He was a diver by profession, and was employed for the munificent sum of ten dollars, out of which he had to pay his assistants, to attach a cable to an anchor which had been lost in a recent collision in the harbor. A large and powerful man, his armor was proportionately weighted to cause him to sink readily. He had been down two minutes, when the air pipe, which he knew to be weak, but was too poor to replace before his last descent, burst with a loud report. He comrades hauled him up very quickly, and frantically dashed off the glass mask under which he was suffocating. He gasped heavily, and then, as they thought, expired. According to some physicians the case was by no means hopeless, but it was so thought by the bystanders, and no attempts at resuscitation were made. On the contrary, the remains were speedily placed in an iceless, where all possibilities of revival were of course at once extinguished. Since the recent evidences of Professor Van Der Weyde in Court, in the Cox-Holl murder case, the uncharitable are beginning to say that the undertakers are killing more people than even the doctors—surely an unworthy jibe at two deserving classes of citizens.

The northern portions of Manhattan Island are being built up with remarkable rapidity, and business people generally seem encouraged with the conviction that we have at least seen the worst of the results of the panic of 1873, and that we have entered on an era of renewed prosperity. What is held to be a significant feature, one of the straws which show the way the wind blows, is the wonderful impetus lately given to immigration. Culminating in 1872, it fell off tremendously, but has started up very briskly now. Mennonites from Russia, mostly well supplied with money, and Icelanders, scarcely less thrifty, have just touched our shores, and been whirled West by the earliest trains, while the bone and sinew and brain of England has for the first time rivalled the influx of Irish and Germans.

Charges have been preferred against a Police Commissioner, the last of the batch recently removed for the embezzlement of a considerable balance received from policemen in payment for situations. His friends hold that the thing is all rubbish, a mere concoction for political effect. It has, however, aroused considerable interest, for we are virtuous nowadays in New York, and it is several months at least since we had to haul over the coals for dishonesty any of our public officials.

We are all anxiously looking out for the great Canada balloon, which its novel machinery it is claimed can be navigated with the precision of an ocean steamship. Our own aeronauts at Manhattan Beach are attracting a great deal of attention with their great captive balloons, and several adjuncts of renown have been making experiments in conjunction with the director of the enterprise, Professor King.

John Brady, the oldest printer in America, and a veteran of 1812, who remembers Horace Greeley when a ras boy, he applied for work at the Evening Post, has just been carried to his long home. The old horses are diminishing fast in numbers, and their annual feasts at the Sturtevant House are very pathetic festivities.

RADIX.

Personal and Impersonal.

Tennyson sometimes rewrites a poem thirty times before he entrusts it to the printers.

It was not Pinnafore Sullivan that reached Boston the other night; it was Barry's son.

Miss M. B. Patterson, a granddaughter of Andy Johnson, is starting out as a lecturer.

The new book by Berthold Auerbach is called Lotterweis—a name he owed for anything.

Right on time, comes the denial of the engagement of the Prince Imperial and the Princess Beatrice.

James Parton has been writing about George Washington, and don't believe a word of the hatchet story.

That son Dumas's work, swelling the ministries of war and of the colonies to the funeral of the Prince Imperial.

The gentle murderer, Chastine Cox, has the southern dislike of the Yankee, especially the Yank that yanked him at Boston.

Lady de Clifford, who is still in her sixteenth year, and who was married in April, is a particular present admiration of English society.

Eugenie will make her last visit to her mother, and, after a few months stay, retire to a convent and end her life within the sacred walls.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis LaCosta had been married seventy-six years, when, a few days ago, Mrs. LaCosta died, at Christ Lake, N. Y., aged ninety-four.

Bob Ingersoll has written a letter on the Coney Island Jew question, in which he sets forth his disbelief in all Bible history or traditions, as vehemently as ever.

Col. Richard P. Morgan, aged eighty-one, the oldest civil engineer in America, was paid $85 in 1841 for making the preliminary survey of the Hudson River Railroad.

Widow Dorsey, the benefactress of Jeff Davis, was a niece of Mrs. Warfield, the author of that enflamed novel "The Household of Bouverie," and could handle several modern languages.

In Jeff Davis's forthcoming book, he is undecided as yet whether to give the fiercest fits to Alexk Stephens or to Joe Johnston. He loves one about as well as the other and hopes to treat them impartially.

A Washington special says Carl Schurz has been sparking one of Secretary Evarts' daughters, but was unsuccessful in his suit because of a blonde countrywoman of his who has a place in the interior department.

The Republicans of Pennsylvania held their state convention and nominated a strong state ticket Wednesday of last week. Their platform is of the stalwart sort. They promptly and fully accept the issues raised by the Democrats in the recent extra session of Congress, and indicate an earnest, aggressive campaign on those issues. In this they agree with Republicans of Maine and Wisconsin. Stalwartism is the order all along the Republican line, in all the states. Everywhere the issues raised at the extra session of Congress are promptly, squarely, and eagerly accepted by the Republicans.

The British army lost four times as many men from cholera on their return march from Afghanistan as they lost in battle during the whole war. In fact, they lost certainly as many men as their conquest is worth.

The American horse Parole was beaten in the race for the Goodwood cup, Thursday, it is probable because of the heaviness of the track, as he was once before beaten in England from that cause. It rained with great violence in the morning before the race and Parole is a light horse, of great speed and bottom, but not sufficiently strong to carry weight over a heavy track. Isonomy, who won, is a much stronger horse, and was reported to be in such condition that the heavy track favored him.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12, - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The fears of yellow fever, which have been in some measure justified by the occurrence of isolated cases, both in Brooklyn and New York, are quite an injury in some quarters in a business point of view. The quarantine regulations are very stringent, and the owners of steamers running to Havana are complaining bitterly. They say it costs them $500 extra to a steamer in the season as they are now required to do. At the same time some people are so anxious to distinguish themselves, or so reckless on account of their sufferings by hard times, that applications by the score have made for the positions of nurses at Memphis and other infected places down South, mainly by unacclimated persons, and the days of news editors of the great daily newspapers are made a burden to them by reason of the swarms of correspondents who are ambitious to write the current history of the epidemic which, unfortunately for them perhaps, does not seem yet to have arrived, and which we devoutly hope will not arrive, even for the benefit of our more or less regular brethren of the quill. The heat has been quite severe for some days, and also there seems to be a less average of sun-strokes for human victims, the horses have suffered abnormally, and and several have fallen down in a regular apoplectic way on Broadway every day.

The pioneer grapellers, Moody and Sankey, are again with us, after a season of recuperation, the latter in Europe, the former at that charming country residence at Northfield, Mass., which has so mysteriously come into his possession, he being one of those good people who work very hard and get no pay for their services. They are holding forth at Cooper Institute, Sankey singing as sweetly and Moody speaking as volubly and as ungrammatically as ever. The burden of his discourse is as usual to lay all our burdens upon Jesus. Logically this would seem encouragement to laziness and general shiftlessness, in fact, not differing much from the fatality doctrines of the Turks. The terrible heat in the illventilated hall has not prevented the assembling of the enthusiasm over the converts who are excited by the surroundings to stand up in the face of the multitude and ask for prayers is very great. The clergy of various denominations seem to have lost interest in the evangelists.

The gyroscopical Talmage, while absent in the flesh still exercises the spirits of his Brooklyn flock and a vast number of outsiders. His movements have, with more or less reticence, been telegraphed at considerable length by his shrewd——business managers in England, and whether true or simply as a dexterous advertising dodge, it is now asserted that he has so charmed the Englishmen with the eloquence of his convoluting arms, legs, hair, ears and jaw that his own people will be left to seek some other attraction. Some who profess to know all about it even go so far as to say the thing was cut and dried long ago, and that immediately at the close of the trial on "common fame" Talmage and a London theatre manager made terms by cable for a three years' starring tour.

The current number of Harper's Weekly contains an article on the recent doings of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, which embody some remarkable facts and figures. It shows among other things that during 1878 the company paid out to the survivors of its policyholders the enormous sum of three and a half millions of dollars, and practically accounts for this immense business by thus explaining the nature of the institution.

"For those who only want insurance it may be interesting to learn that the Mutual Life is a compact of individuals all insuring each other, the new comer and the old being on one footing. There is no question of stock or proprietary interest of the stock holders of a corporation standing up to absorb and control the common interest. The measure of that interest has now attained a magnitude in millions, some two and-five per cent. greater than all the capital of the banks of the metropolis, being in the aggregate eighty-seven millions of dollars. It is the largest financial corporation known to exist, its policies outstanding securing life insurance equal in amount the entire issue of the national bank currency afloat."

The constant increase of this incomparable success is still further accounted for by the reduction of premium rates which the Mutual put in force something like a year ago, and which enables it to give insurance of the most unquestioned safety at the lowest known figures.

Poverty and the willingness to run heavy risks for light gain have caused the death, or, at any rate, the asphyxiation of a brave man. He was a diver by profession, and was employed for the munificent sum of ten dollars, out of which he had to pay his assistants, to attach a cable to an anchor which had been lost in a recent collision in the harbor. A large and powerful man, his armor was proportionately weighted to cause him to sink readily. He had been down two minutes, when the air pipe, which he knew to be weak, but was too poor to replace before his last descent, burst with a loud report. He comrades hauled him up very quickly, and frantically dashed off the glass mask under which he was suffocating. He gasped heavily, and then, as they thought, expired. According to some physicians the case was by no means hopeless, but it was so thought by the bystanders, and no attempts at resuscitation were made. On the contrary, the remains were specially placed in an ice-box, where all possibilities of revival were of course at once extinguished. Since the recent evidence of Professor Van Der Weyde in Court, in the Cox-Hall murder case, the uncharitable are beginning to say that the undertakers are killing more people than even the doctors—merely an unworthy jibe at two deserving classes of citizens.

The northern portions of Manhattan Island are being built up with remarkable rapidity, and business people generally seem encouraged with the conviction that we have at least seen the worst of the results of the panic of 1873, and that we have entered on an era of renewed prosperity. What is held to be a significant feature, one of the straws which show the way the wind blows, is the wonderful impetus lately given to immigration. Culminating in 1872, it fell off tremendously, but has started up very briskly now. Mennonites from Russia, mostly well supplied with money, and Icelanders, scarcely less thrifty, have just touched our shores, and been whirled West by the earliest trains, while the bone and sinew and brain of England has for the first time rivalled the influx of Irish and Germans.

Charges have been preferred against a Police Commissioner, the last of the batch recently removed for the embezzlement of a considerable balance received from policemen in payment for uniforms. His friends hold that the thing is all rubbish, a mere concoction for political effect. It has, however, aroused considerable interest, for we are virtuous nowadays in New York, and it is several months at least since we had to haul over the coals for dishonesty any of our public officials.

We are all anxiously looking out for the great Canada balloon, which its novel machinery it is claimed can be navigated with the precision of an ocean steamship. Our own acronauts at Manhattan Beach are attracting a great deal of attention with their great captive balloons, and several scientists of renown have been making experiments in conjunction with the director of the enterprise, Professor King.

John Brady, the oldest printer in America, and a veteran of 1812, who remembers Horace Greeley when a raw boy, he applied for work at the Evening Post, has just been carried to his long home. The old hearer are diminishing fast in numbers, and their annual feasts at the Stuyvesant House are very pathetic festivities.

RADIX.

Personal and Impersonal.

Tennyson sometimes rewrites a poem thirty times before he entrusts it to the printers.

It was not Pinnafore Sullivan that reached Boston the other night; it was Barry's son.

The new book by Benjamin Averbach is called Uniterings—a name too sweet for anything.

Right on time, comes the denial of the engagement of the Prince Imperial and the Princess Beatrice.

James Parton has been writing about George Washington, and don't believe a word of the hatchet story.

That was Dr. Cuyler's work, sending the ministers of war and of the colonies to the funeral of the Prince Imperial.

The gentle murderer, Chastine Cox, has the southrons dislike of the Yanks—especially the Yank that yanked him at Boston.

Lady de Clifford, who is still in her sixseenth year, and who was married in April, is a particular present admiration of English society.

Eugenie will make her last visit to her mother, and, after a few months stay, retires to a convent and end her life within the sacred walls.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis LaCosta had been married seventy-six years, when, a few days ago, Mrs. LaCosta died, at Christel Lake, N. Y., aged ninety-four.

Bob Ingersoll has written a letter on the Coney Island Jew question, in which he sets forth his disbelief in all Bible history or traditions, as vehemently as ever.

Col. Richard P. Morgan, aged eighty-one, the oldest civil engineer in America, was paid $85 in 1841 for making the preliminary survey of the Hudson River Railroad.

Widow Dorsey, the benefactress of Jeff Davis, was a niece of Mrs Warfield, the author of that enflamed novel "The Household of Bonverie," and could handle several modern languages.

In Jeff Davis's forthcoming book, he is undecided as yet whether to give the fiercest fits to Alex. Stephens or to Joe Johnston. He loves one about as well as the other and hopes to treat them impartially.

A Washington special says Carl Schurz has been sparking one of Secretary Evarts' daughters, but was unsuccessful in his suit because of a blonde country woman of his who has a place in the interior department.

The Republicans of Pennsylvania held their state convention and nominated a strong state ticket Wednesday of last week. Their platform is of the stalwart sort. They promptly and fully accept the issue raised by the Democrats in the recent extra session of Congress, and indicate an earnest, aggressive campaign on those issues. In this they agree with Republicans of Maine and Wisconsin. Stalwartism is the order all along the Republican line, in all the states. Everywhere the issues raised at the extra session of Congress are promptly, squarely, and eagerly accepted by the Republicans.

The British army lost four times as many men from cholera on their return march from Afghanistan as they lost in battle during the whole war. In fact, they lost certainly as many men as their conquest is worth.

The American horse Parole was beaten in the race for the Goodwood cup, Thursday, it is probable because of the heaviness of the track, as he was once before beaten in England from that cause. It rained with great violence in the morning before the races and Parole is a light horse, of great speed and bottom, but not sufficiently strong to carry weight over a heavy track. Isonomy, who won, is a much stronger horse, and was expected to be in such condition that the heavy track favored him.

THE SPANISH DOCTORS.

She Gets on a Glorious Drunk and Goes in Limbo!

The boys are full. One after another drug pointers is come and shatter the few bright visions of this life. It is sad to contemplate the end to which true genius comes, and no sadder case has come, in the person of the accomplished Spaniard. We remember his radiant countenance, his beautiful eyes, his faultless attire, his tunic and fancy felt top and his admirable dignity, and we weep—yes, actually. We shall never again have confidence in woman kind, it can go no one wings. We take the following from the Petoskey Record:

On Friday, the "Spanish Doctors" started on a professional tour to Charlevoix, but failing to arrive upon hand in time to take the wagon, owing to the drunken disappointment at the awkward manner, by draughts from the flowing bowl, in which she was joined by a male patient, who was also in here for consumption on the journey. He had charge of the grip-sack, and was also bottle holder for the exercise, as we understand a huge-necked bottle of Hostetter was protruding from the pocket of the breast packet, which he either opposed to his patient and feared throw upon a cold frost, or was under the spell of his medical adviser in powers of embalmment, as he soon disappeared from the stage of action, and was seen no more, while the Doctress continued around promiscuously in quest of adventure, with a willing and unsteady gait, visiting the wheels of several of the prominent professional men, entertaining them by the cultured and refined fashion of her conversation, and finally running into custody of an inmate by the intimations of her musical voice, and the glitter of her wicked eyes. She met with a little accident in coming out of the upper room of one of our business buildings, probably owing to her fondness for stepping on a piece of orange peel, whereby she was precipitated to the bottom of a flight of stairs. Although slight in amount, she proved too much of a specimen to be extensively agitated, and we caused her erect position with as little difficulty as though she had traveled the steps in regular order, instead of overwhelming course and manner time by one desperate bound. Her petitions, however, increased in intensity, and late in the afternoon it was found necessary to arrest her, which Marshal Ingalls accordingly did, but only succeeded in doing so after a desperate struggle, in which it was found necessary to handcuff her, and place her on a dray, in which condition she was conveyed to the dock, locked also, of the ferry boat, and conveyed to Little Traverse Jail. The Marshal was assisted by Constable Johnston, and had his coat badly torn in the melee. On Saturday, she was brought before Justice Parker, and plead not guilty, and as it would have been necessary to change the nature of the complaint from "loud and boisterous talking," to "drunk and disorderly," it was deemed best not to go to the expense of a litigated trial, especially as she had already made arrangements for leaving town for a season, and would undoubtedly have went quietly home in the first instance, had she not complied with liquor by one H. H. McClure, who formerly occupied the range house with her, and who for some time supposed had designs upon her pocket book, believing her to be in the possession of a sum of money which she had reserved to complete the payment on a piece of ground lately purchased. McClure, who was arrested at the same time, was fined $10 and costs, or ten days in jail. After making frantic efforts to raise the money, he finally threw up the sponge, and for 10 days, at least, will be sober man.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

South Arm—New Saw Mill—Matrimonial—A Bath in the Jordan—County Road—Horton's Bay—Etc.

DEAR SENTINEL:

A week ago we took the beautiful Nellie Bush for an excursion to South Arm and the Jordan. Marshal McLeod was on route for the same locality in search of an cattle. No one knows better than him how to cater to the wants of the public in regard to the most question, and his success of as enterprising and worthy a citizen. We found Mr. W. F. Empey immersed in business as usual, and preparing, as rumor has it, to embark on the voyage of matrimonial life. Success to him. We had the pleasure of an acquaintance with Messrs. J. H. Palmiter & Co., who are engaged in the sale of dry goods and drugs. Dr. Willard keeps his office in their store and reports a good practice. He is of the Eclectic school and appears to be thoroughly acquainted with his profession. Mr. D. T. Miesner has erected a fine store and is about to engage in the manufacture and sale of boots and shoes. Mr. Jessie Weikel and his excellent lady keep the village hotel, where the stranger can always get a good, plain meal on short notice. Landlord Weikel has recently returned from a trip to California. He exhibited to us some rare curiosities among which was a specimen of the bark, 20 inches thick, of the mammoth trees that are to be found nowhere else upon the earth, excepting in the Golden state. He also presented us with a California horned toad, nicely preserved, and gave us much information respecting the Pacific coast. In Mr. Weikel's parlor we saw an elaborately worked motto, beautifully framed, which pathetically reads thus, "What is Home without a Mother-in-law?" We tried to weep, but like Nasby's, our eyes would not give down.

E. A. H. Cole and S. G. Jeanson of the west side, are each doing a good business in the mercantile line, and handling large quantities of wool and bark.

Hon. d. Nichols of the place is largely interested in real estate on both sides, which fact must prove of great advantage to those wishing to settle there.

But we were curious to see the famous Jordan and to enjoy a good fish in that celebrated trout stream. Therefore after providing ourselves with all the paraphernalia for fishing, including a good dinner from landlady Weikel's pantry, in company with our son, we started up the river. But our career was brief for our boat capsizing we took an unintentional bath, and found it wet and cold, thus proving that "Jordan is a hard road to travel."

We recently took a stroll also on the county road. Among its enterprising farmers we met Messrs. Wakefield, Black, Ward and Stevens. The gentlemen have nobly survived the days of "johnny-cake and lollypop" and are now enjoying comfort and plenty. Mr. Stevens has one of the finest gardens we have seen in the county. He believes in "clover and plaster" and uses them liberally.

We strolled as far south as the Ross neighborhood and found a "boss" country the entire route. Charlevoix county has seen its worst days, and is now on the high road to prosperity. With its fine climate and soil, its navigable waters and wealth of timber, it must soon become one of the richest counties in Northern Michigan.

We omitted to say that we recently enjoyed a most pleasant visit at Horton's Bay, spending a night under the hospitable roof of Mr. and Mrs. Stroud, who made our visit so agreeable that we hope soon to repeat it. Horton Bay is a delightful spot where we shall be disappointed if a village does not loom up at an distant day.

CLERICUS.

COMMON COUNCIL.—The Village Council met Saturday evening.

W. A. Smith was elected Chief Engineer of the Village and the Committee on Fires, their Prevention and Subjugation, were instructed to report a plan for the organization of a Fire Department.

A resolution to build crosswalks on the several streets was referred to the Committee on Streets and Sidewalks.

The Clerk was instructed to serve notice on the Marshal to collect the billiard-table license.

Bills of W. A. Smith, of $15.11, for printing, and of Village Surveyor, of $13, [illegible]

Prince Napoleon's second has been recovered from the Zulus; and the British are making haste to hand it over to the Bonaparte family, instead of offering it to one of the British princes royal. Perhaps this is because it is an ordinary fighting sword, and not a sword calculated to shine at balls, receptions, and teas.

The clearing news continues to come from Russia that the Republicans are getting accessions constantly from the ranks of the oppressors. Their canvass has begun with uncommon vigor and heartiness, far in advance of the usual point at this time in the campaign. They are united and earnest, and are determined to win, and will, if thorough organization and hard work can give them success.

The announcement is made from Rome that the pope has agreed to a compromise with Germany, on terms which seem to be a practical victory for Bismarck. The exiled priests and prelates are to be permitted to return to Germany provided they first seek permission of the emperor, the clergy are to obey the laws and all nominations of the clergy are to be submitted to the government.

Grant's reception in Japan was one of the events of the century. Never before in the history of that country were such honors paid either to native princes or foreign ambassadors. Not only did the government of Japan thank their monarch to give a right hospitable welcome to the man on horseback, but private citizens vied with each other to call out to do him honor. The emperor English alone, of all the foreigners domiciled in Tokio, resolutely abstained from participating in the festivities. The General will sail from Japan to California on the last week of this month.

Congestion of the lungs was the immediate cause. The remains were taken to Chicago.

THE celebrated yacht Mamie, of Kenosha, was in port last week. Her passengers consisted of Mayor P. Robinson, of Kenosha, and Messrs. Kimball and Dewey, of the same city. The captain thinks their visit here will be the means of making Pine Lake a favorite resort for sailing yachts.

A small force of men will be kept at work until next Friday, at which time another "bee" will be held extending through two days, which it is confidently expected will collect together at least 200 of the stalwarts. Money-Making Men and Women

Mechanics and manufacturers who have done so by having something else done as by having something else done as well as by doing it themselves, have learned that a postage stamp is often the best investment. Circulars and catalogues that are neatly printed and tastefully illustrated are the best business getters. Well-directed letters to a few selected names are often more effective than a large indiscriminate mailing. Let us help you to make money by adopting printing as a part of your business system. Estimates cheerfully furnished. Write us to-day.

Business men who are ambitious to get on in the world should read the following letter from a man who has done it:

"I have been a reader of your paper for a number of years, and have noticed that a large number of those who have succeeded in life have done so by reading and profiting by the experience of others. I have also noticed that a large number of those who have failed in life have done so because they were too proud to learn from others, and too conceited to profit by their mistakes. I have made a success in life, and I attribute it largely to the fact that I have always been willing to learn from others, and have never been too proud to ask for information when I needed it. I have also been a careful reader of your paper, and have profited by the experience of others as related in its columns. I have also been careful to avoid the mistakes of others as related in your paper. I have also been careful to avoid the mistakes of others as related in your paper. I have also been careful to avoid the mistakes of others as related in your paper

OUR RAMA LETTER.

New York, August 13, 1879.

Editor Sentinel:

The paper I send herewith just came to Washington, and I must acknowledge I was surprised to see, in the columns of that journal, the Democratic Convention described as "M. le Président," the Grand Duke Governor of the Empire State named, and other terms appropriate to the Imperial and Kingly Courts of Europe. I had supposed that we had thrown off all such titles when we established a Republican Government, and that we were all equal before the law. But it seems that the Democratic party has not yet learned that lesson, and that it still clings to the old forms of Monarchy. Why, the Democratic Convention was composed of delegates from the several States, and the Governor of New York was only a delegate from his State, and had no more right to be called President of the Convention than any other delegate. But the Democratic party has not yet learned the lesson of Republicanism, and it is not to be expected that it will do so for some time to come.

The nomination of Gen. Hancock by the Democratic Convention at Cincinnati, and the appointment of Gen. Sherman as Commander of the Army, has created considerable excitement in New York and Brooklyn, where the people have divided the Democratic party into two factions, the Hancock faction and the Tilden faction. The Hancock faction is composed of the Democratic politicians who have been out of office for many years, and who are anxious to get back into power, and who will support Hancock for President, because they think that he will be elected, and that they will then get the offices. The Tilden faction is composed of the Democratic politicians who have been in office for many years, and who are anxious to get back into power, and who will support Tilden for President, because they think that he will be elected, and that they will then get the offices. The Hancock faction is composed of the Democratic politicians who have been out of office for many years, and who are anxious to get back into power, and who will support Hancock for President, because they think that he will be elected, and that they will then get the offices. The Tilden faction is composed of the Democratic politicians who have been in office for many years, and who are anxious to get back into power, and who will support Tilden for President, because they think that he will be elected, and that they will then get the offices.

The Democratic party is a party of office-seekers, and it is a party of office-holders. The Democratic party is a party of office-seekers, and it is a party of office-holders. The Democratic party is a party of office-seekers, and it is a party of office-holders.

—An eminent French meteorological writer asserts that one of the most striking peculiarities of the twilight is the color of the sky, and this is regulated entirely by the state of condensation of the suspended watery vapor: the successive layers of air charged with vapor stop the different rays of light—first the blue, then the yellow, and lastly the red; when the sun is near the horizon, the rays have to traverse a great thickness of vapor, and so the last rays are almost and the first at sunrise are red. The disappearance of clouds at sunset is a sign of fine weather, for it is due to the sinking of the clouds into the warmer strata near the surface of the earth, where they are evaporated, and these clouds. In disappearing leave behind them a large amount of vapor in the air, and the sun's rays shine red through this medium.

—A new sugar process is described—one that requires, as it appears, no machinery, nor the immense motive power needed to work the mills and which gets out fully twenty per cent. more juice than by the use of mills. The cane is first cut into short pieces and steeped, so that out of the closed cells is taken the juice by the well-known law of osmose or endosmosis. Hence the juice is much purer, since it is freer of albumen and of the ferments and matters which are left behind in the cells. The density of the juice thus obtained may be judged of by the fact that a clarifier of five hundred and sixty gallons capacity, when defecated, give "scum" sufficient to fill a shop basin. The drawbacks to this process are the large quantities of water required for its use—much of which, however, can be utilized for condensing purposes—and the addition to the juice of seventy or thirty per cent. of water, which means so much extra evaporation and so much extra electric light bill per year, yield of twenty per cent. more than compensates for these disadvantages.—N. Y. Sun.

—M. du Temple proposes to accomplish aerial navigation by means of an apparatus having the form of a great bird, and specially to obtain by a pilot boat, containing a steam engine for operating a screw propeller placed behind, and by means of a shaft resting on its bulwarks and in the plane of symmetry; the wings are of light frame-work, bound tightly to the car on which the pilot stands, perfectly rigid, cannot flap like the wings of a bird. Thus, the bulwarks of the boat, the wings and the axle of the screw are in the same plane. Astern, there is a vertical rudder and a horizontal tail, both movable horizontally. On the ground, the device rests on three feet supplied with rollers, and so arranged as to inclose the apparatus about twenty degrees, the stern being the lower. The screw is four meters in diameter and has three wings, appearing to cover two-thirds of its circle. The pitch is twelve meters. The wings have about fifty square meters surface, the tail twelve square meters, and the car is four square meters in plan. According to the inventor, a force of six horses is necessary to propel the apparatus at a rate of nine meters per second.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

ON THE CHANNEL BOAT.

[DOVER CHRON. MAY, 1879.]

"WHAT! Fred, you here! I didn't see you come aboard at Ostend."

"I was the Empress last week, they said that you were coming over, But didn't see you nowhere."

"Oh! yes, I came by the Prince of Wales. And stretched myself out at last in berth I was allowed like a swell. I'm mighty glad to meet you, Will! Where are you going?"

"Paris."

"Good! so am I. I've got to meet My cousin Charley Harris. He's over there on leave; I hope We'll have some decent weather."

"Take care there, hold your hat, it blows."

"Yes; how this steamer leaves! He never steers steadily. I thought every time he crosses, We'd have a smash."

"I'm traveling with My mother and my brother. They're both below, I came on deck To get a breath of air."

"Is that the mother of the twins? Introduce me, do! I'm for ventilation, being sea-sick myself. Where did you meet them in London? We were stopping at the Langham."

"You were? Why, so was I. But then I took a fancy suddenly At breakfast time, and went away The afternoon on Monday; And yet, within the short space I've been on board, I've seen a dozen Faces I know, and more than that, But, Will, no one I'd rather see Than you. Come, tell me all about her. How's Georgie, your boy?"

"Who was she, Fred?"

"Ah! that's just it. I couldn't even remember Her name, or anything at all About her. Brown-haired, I say, she was not any one Be long; so off I started, And here I am, you see."

"All for an unknown charmer! You're mad, my boy. Let's stroll about. The sea is growing rough. Don't taste it, Go forward, if you like. The view May please you better perhaps. We're discussing soup to France, in hair At least shall be at Calais. See! there's the town and, just this side The port with shipping. Can't you see the spires, And—"

"Here, Will, stop a minute. By Jove! look there! Just get in gear, With red flowers in her bonnet! I do declare—I can. It's she! I'd know my own Georgie anywhere. What luck, if I feel only known! How can I be sure? Shall I, Will? Look! here she comes."

"Why, Fred, you fool! That girl in gray's not—"

—Impossible! for I met—

"Yes!"

THE MISSING DEED.

CHAPTER I.

THREE BENDINGS, Solicitors, Bewark—Last, a parchment document, being an indenture of mortgage, dated the 9th day of February, 1861, and made between Henry Forbes of the first part, Reuben Howard and Frederick Pollock of the second part, William Henry Austin and Emily Austin, his wife, of the third part, and Thomas Bull and Sidney Forrest Dysart of the fourth part. Which parchment shall lying for same in the office of Messrs. Sharpe & Floyd, solicitors of No. 9 Lincoln's Inn Fields, shall receive the above reward.

"No, Mr. Morpeth; I am sorry to say, no news whatever."

The speaker was Mr. Sharpe, the senior partner of the firm of Sharpe & Floyd, whose office it was. He, also, had appeared at intervals in all the leading newspapers during nearly six months prior to the date of our story. Mr. Sharpe was seated in his special sanctum, to which none but the more important clients of the firm were admitted. A few general purpose clerks and table sat a middle-aged gentleman, whose look of eager anxiety and nervous haste in striking contrast to the placid, self-possession of his solicitor. Mr. Morpeth's impatience scarcely left him time to remove his hat or gloves before he broke out with the anxious question, "Well, Mr. Sharpe, any news of the missing deed?" and received the reply above quoted.

"But, good heavens! my dear sir, in another week the Courts will be closed for hearing! What on earth is to be done?"

"We can apply for an adjournment, if you like; but, of course, it is only putting off the evil day. You know my opinion about the matter."

"That the deed is no longer in existence. I can't—I won't believe it. At any rate, let us make another trial. I would willingly give a thousand if I could only be recovered."

"Quite hopeless, my dear sir. You have already increased the reward from one hundred pounds to three hundred pounds. If the deed was still in existence the ladder would have been only too glad to receive it for a fifth part of such a reward. You may make up your mind that it has been destroyed, either purposely or accidentally; I can not say which, and I don't like to conjecture; but in any case you may rest assured that the reason it is not produced is, that it is beyond production; in fact, that it no longer exists."

"It is all very well for you to talk in that philosophical manner; but how on earth are we to prove our case without it?"

"It will be up-hill work, I grant; but as our leader, Mr. Brass, told you in consultation last week, the case is by no means hopeless. The deed being lost, and no copy in existence, parole evidence will be admissible. The difficulty is (and it is no use mincing the matter), the evidence in question will be exclusively that of interested parties; and, considering the very large amount that is at stake, that is a point the other side will naturally make the most of."

"No doubt they will; that is just what drives me frantic, and ya tells of it as calmly as if you were discussing the telephone or the last new planet. I know, and you know, that my cause is just and right. To think that I and my poor wife, the very soul of honor, should have to stand up on the witness box and be insulted with insinuations that we are swearing falsely for the sake of a few thousands. Good God! it makes my blood boil to think of it. I feel almost inclined to say that; will give up the whole thing rather than face such a horrible ordeal."

"Nay, my dear sir," said Mr. Sharpe, alarmed at the threatened relapse of a promising litigation, "that would never do. To give in at the stage would be tantamount to an admission, with most people, at any rate, that you had no case all along. No, no; you must try the fortune of war. The first struggles will not be final by any means. If you are beaten, of course you will carry the case to the Court of Appeals; and I know the other side intends to do so, if we should be fortunate enough to get the better of them."

"A second chapter of tortures," groaned Mr. Morpeth. "I shall never believe it will almost kill my wife. I tell you what, Mr. Sharpe, at any rate, we will not be beaten easily. I will put an advertisement again—every day until the trial comes on, and make the reward five hundred pounds."

Mr. Sharpe shrugged his shoulders. "It won't make any difference, you may rest assured; but, as the reward is not likely to be claimed, it is a matter whether you offer three hundred or five."

He touched the bell and took up the Times which lay upon the table. A smart young fellow entered in answer to his summons, and he continued, handing him the paper.

"Here, Halliday, copy out this advertisement again, but making the reward five hundred instead of three; and then take it round to the advertising agent and ask him to insert it in small type for the next fortnight. We'll try the experiment, as any rate, Mr. Morpeth; but I'm afraid I can't encourage you to hope much from the result."

"It's a forlorn hope, Mr. Sharpe, I admit, but I won't lose even a shadow of a chance if I can help it. If I only get things back the deed, I shall regard my five hundred pounds as extremely well invested, I can assure you."

CHAPTER II.

Tom Halliday was copying clerk and managing clerk to the offices of Messrs. Sharpe & Floyd. He was just two and twenty, wrote a genteel hand, had a capital appetite and earned eighteen shillings a week, which, till lately, had sufficed for his moderate needs. Within the last twenty-four months, however, he had become engaged to be married; but, as in the course of six months their united savings only amounted to five-and-thirty shillings and seven-and-sixpence, their engagement appeared likely to be rather a long one. On Saturday morning, the young people were in the habit of taking a long walk together, followed by tea at Chancery lane, where Bessie resided with her widowed mother, and sometimes the young couple made their way back to Chancery lane, Tom purchasing a pint of oysters on his way, as a contribution to Mrs. Moyse's refreshment arrangements. They found the table spread, a pot of home-made jam and a plate of watercresses shedding their dew on the fender hearth, the kettle sitting on the kob; and Mrs. Moyse bustling about in the final preparations and talking. Uncle Kockwidge sat there with his hat on, in his accustomed place by the fire.

Mrs. Moyse's first taking possession, some years before, of the housekeeper's apartment in Bedford row, Uncle Kockwidge had complained of a draught, and had put on his hat as a protection. As the rest of the family did not perceive any draught, and rashly ventured to question its existence, Uncle Kockwidge, who could never avoid contradiction, became firmly convinced that there was a very severe draught indeed, and had continued to wear his hat indoors as well as out ever since. He had never looked with a very favorable eye on Tom Halliday, and had occasionally caused Bessie considerable embarrassment by uttering some most private reflections to his prejudice. On the present occasion, the first greetings were scarcely over when Uncle Kockwidge, who had been eyeing Tom over in a critical manner, remarked to himself, but quite audibly: "I'm afraid I can't encourage you to hope much from the result."

"What does you mean, you old man?" inquired Tom, who had caught the words.

"No, no, Morpeth; I am sorry to say, no news whatever."

"Mean, you young jackanapes, that I'm a fool, I suppose. Let's stroll about."

"Oh, no, Tom, don't go," said Mrs. Moyse, who was always ready to act as peacemaker. "Uncle Kockwidge didn't mean to say anything about your hair, Tom, only he thinks it's rather long, and—"

"Why couldn't he leave my trousers alone, then?" said Tom, still by no means pacified.

Here Uncle Kockwidge, who had been looking about uneasily, as if in search of something, pulled a large black pin out of his necktie, and began digging vigorously at a shrimp as though apparently without satisfactory result.

"No, uncle," said Mrs. Moyse, taking the pin away from him; "not like that. You're thinking of winkles; these are shrimps." We are grieved to confess that the good lady pronounced the words as "s'rimps."

"Then what did he say they was winkles for?" said Uncle Keckwidge, much aggrieved.

"I didn't," said Tom, indignantly, "I never said anything of the sort."

"Young man," replied Uncle Keckwidge, with dignity, "you said distinctly winkles; I assisted parliamentary in am very partial to winkles; and these shrimps ain't no account."

"Come, come," said Bessie, "you know the last time Tom brought winkles you said you preferred shrimps."

"We ain't had winkles," resumed the old man, quite ignoring his niece's remark, "not since that day when we found the earwigs in my Sunday hat. And then they was in a pot."

"No, no, uncle," said Mrs. Moyse, "that wasn't winkles; that was cels."

"I dunno about that," said Uncle Keckwidge, thoughtfully; "but I know you pick 'em out with a pin. With a pin!" he repeated at intervals, like an echo, fainter and fainter each time.

"With a pin!" and then again relapsed into silence.

By the way of changing the subject, Tom began to tell Mrs. Moyse how the great case of Davis vs. Morpeth was expected to come off on Wednesday week, and how the most important title-deed was mysteriously missing, and Mr. Morpeth had offered a reward of five hundred pounds to any one who would restore it.

Uncle Keckwidge brightened up suddenly at the word "reward."

"I know," he said, nodding his head sagely. "I see the bill myself, at the baker's round the corner. A farmer dog with one eye, answers to the name of Jack. Ten shillin' re ward."

"No, no, uncle," said Bessie, "that's not the reward we were talking about. Tom was telling us about a paper that was lost, and the gentleman offered a heap of money to get it back again. Five hundred golden sovereigns, wasn't it, Tom?"

"Five hundred pounds for finding a tarrier dog," replied Uncle Keckwidge.

"It ain't likely. Not if he was ever such a stunner for ran."

"I didn't say anything about tarrier dogs, Mr. Keckwidge," exclaimed Tom.

"I said a deal—Mr. Morpeth's deed."

"You distinctly said a tarrier dog, with one eye," said Uncle Keckwidge.

"I never said anything of the kind!" shouted Tom. "I said it was a deed that was lost—a parchment document."

"I said all along it was a dog you meant," said the old man, only catching the last word of the sentence. "A dog stravyed!"

"It's all cut up, at any rate," said Mrs. Moyse, tinging open her cupboard. "There's two dozen pots cheese, and they've each got a piece of it. That pot was the first we've opened. And I rather think"—fumbling in the cupboard—"yes, here it is!—I rather think this is all the rest of it."

It was an anxious moment. The mutilated parchment was spread out, the pots uncovered, and the circular fragments restored, though with some difficulty, each to its proper place. At last the task was finished. A few of the mud utterances and provided also were slightly sticky, but not the small est part was missing.

Mrs. Moyse's possession of the deed was easily accounted for. When Messrs. Sharpe & Floyd had removed from Chancery lane, a quantity of old papers, which was regarded as out of date and useless, had been swept into a corner for the dust-man. The deed in question had, by some accident, got among them; and Mrs. Moyse, observing that it was parchment, and being a careful housekeeper, picked it up and laid it aside for the purpose for which she afterward used it.

These particulars were communicated to Tom while Bessie brushed his hat sagely, "I see the bill myself, at the baker's round the corner. A farmer dog with one eye, answers to the name of Jack. Ten shillin' re ward."

"No, no, uncle," said Bessie, "that's not the reward we were talking about. Tom was telling us about a paper that was lost, and the gentleman offered a heap of money to get it back again. Five hundred golden sovereigns, wasn't it, Tom?"

"Five hundred pounds for finding a tarrier dog," replied Uncle Keckwidge.

"I didn't say anything about tarrier dogs, Mr. Keckwidge," exclaimed Tom.

"I said a deal—Mr. Morpeth's deed."

"You distinctly said a tarrier dog, with one eye," said Uncle Keckwidge.

THE SABBATH.

Our Correspondent Thinks there is Another Side to the Question.

PETOSKY NORTH

Knowing you to be a man who, at all times since you assumed control of the SENTINEL have been willing that both sides of every question, when open, were discussed to the public, should the latter, I wish to say a word on the Sunday question.

That the Sabbath has long been observed by certain classes of men is true; that all do not wish to desecrate, and that the class of men who were very strict in it, should cause us to almost astonishing and unique thrill both these did not observe it, and were endeavoring to keep, and in example to do the same.

Christ was frequently complained of by the very good for not observing the Sabbath. The same spirit actuated his enemies among the most subservient of society. They were right, and Christ was wrong. They were holy men, keeping the Sabbath, and observing the ordinances established by God, and to them Christ was a sinner.

Such it is to-day. We who observe the Sabbath and keep it holy, that is in our way and doing God's work, but all who transcribe day as a holiday are in fearfully wicked and perverse act, in fact, no care, good either.

There always were, and always will be plenty of moral people in the world, who are very willing to furnish excuses in for their neglect, and at the same time feel very much shocked at others in a poor exercise of liberty that they would work out in brother. All the naturally inclined to be touching, for me they not to "judge the world," and why one begin now?

The matter of Sabbath-keeping should be a meeting for every man to settle for himself. If he wishes to go to church on that day let him go, or if he chooses to go an excursion, the choice should be equally his, to thus protect Sabbath, keeper, of all shades. We will insist on this privilege ourself too long as we do not in forfeiture with the rights of others; of going or no excursion, or to visit our friends, or even to attend to our business, on that day.

To protect all in their rights, and to rob nothing for ourself but we will not grant to others, is our motto. For that, if granted by, we are willing to spend our life and for them, and the day is not far distant when by many of us will have to do so.

Editorial Notes.

During the month of July there was paid for arrears of pensions $8,051,608.

The Grandharbors are looking for a visit to Maine, Sept. 8th. They will look in vain.

Dr. Glenn, the Democratic candidate for Governor of California, owns a 50,000 acre farm and cultivates 35,000 acres. He employs four or five hundred hands every year to cultivate it.

The yield of cotton in Texas, will be about 15 per cent. greater than last year, owing to the increased acreage. Planters fear the staple will be shorter, except in the universal dry weather.

An emigration association has been formed in Sheffield, England, for the purpose of aiding the workingmen to obtain a livelihood in this country. Skilled workmen in very large numbers will shortly emigrate to this land of the free.

The assessment of that part of Chicago which includes most of its important business blocks, shows a reduction of the valuation from $66,000,000 in 1878, to $46,000,000 in 1879. This is equally divided between real and personal property.

According to the Louisville (Ky) Courier-Journal, "One-third of the voting population of Kentucky cannot read the ballots they vote, and 150,000 children in the State are growing up in ignorance of the mere elements of the English language."

According to the report of the acting secretary of the treasury for the month ending July 31 st, the total indebtedness of the United States is $2,027,207,206.37. The total issue of 4 per cent. bonds is $740,751,100, leaving a balance of $730,000 not yet disposed of.

It is stated that Sumner, the capitalist of Clarkesville, which had a population of 300,000 inhabitants, has only 30,000 since the famine. What we find that this country is terribly afflicted by yellow fever, 6.3 is nothing compared to the scourge of life in India caused by famine.

The Democrats of Yazoo City, Mississippi, have got the politicking business down fine. Instead of scattering voters, they propose going for the candidates. The one or any man who dares to run on the Republican ticket would not be worth a pre straw. Simple, but less effective.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

"City of Grand Rapids"—M. E. Camp Meeting—The Resorts—Little Traverse—Etc.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

A short time since we took the splendid, new steamer, City of Grand Rapids, to avoid the Bay View Camp meeting. They thought best to run short and tax high for the sought, and home rolls badly when there is any sea. Otherwise it is a model of perfection and beauty, and speaks well for the enterprise of its proprietors Messrs. Hannah, Lay & Co. Bishop Bowman of Cincinnati was expected at the camp but he did not, and many were anticipating the great week just passed, as though it would be somewhat like to see a live bishop. Inasmuch that every true pastor is a bishop in the scriptural sense of the term.

The camp meeting was a failure as to the spiritual results were concerned, and however beneficial their meetings may have been in former times, we doubt their ability in the age, especially when they are held over Sunday, as the little good that is accomplished is more than balanced by the Sabbath desecration, in the way of excursions and hilarity, that they foster.

We visited the Presbyterian Resort, near Little Traverse, and also the Lawson grounds, at the Harbor point. Both of these resorts were substantially begun this season, while the Methodist was begun three or four years ago. All are pleasant places, but none compare with Charlevoix as a summer resort. The main part of the mine the bay is so rough that pleasure boating is simply impossible, while at Charlevoix the boating is always good, however rough it may be outside, and here the air is also much better.

Now is the fact we have no railroad nor valid objection to our town, either as a summer resort or place of business. Mus never has no railroad, and yet she outstrips every city in Northern Michigan in the rapidity of her growth. Charlevoix is growing faster than most railroad towns, and however convenient a railroad may be, we question the advisability of persons impoverishing themselves to build one, as is often the case, and then perhaps not get it in the end.

We visited Little Traverse, the former home of Sheriff Cooper, the popular proprietor of the Fountain City House, and were greeted with overwhelming signs of life. We called upon Professor Clark, who is the editor and proprietor of the Republican, and spent the night with Atty. Stonebraker, late of Manistee Co., and our old neighbor, and was gratified to find that his wife, who had long been an invalid was completely restored to health by her residence in Northern Michigan. We met many other old friends, such at Little Traverse and Harbor Point, among whom were Col. Church of Harbor Co, who had Jeff Davis in charge about six months after his capture, and also Col. Wisner a brother in the late Gov. Wisner who is both lawyer and poet. At every place we visited the hotels were full, but some more so than at Charlevoix, although our hotel accommodations have doubled within the past year. Here we enjoy complete immunity from mosquitoes and musquitoes; and as to the morals of our town, from what we can learn, they are as much ahead of Petoskey as a steamer is supposed to its opposite.

CLEANEVE.

The government derives an income of $10,000,000 per annum from the tax on beer. The consumer, and not the manufacturer really pays this money.

An old farmer upon being asked if he rejoiced at the short wheat crop in Europe said, that as long as they are short, he was glad we can help them out. This was certainly a nice way of putting it. That the European countries are looking to this country to fill their depleted granaries is well known.

A New Orleans cashier, who for forty years had filled this important position, is a defaulter in the sum of $20,000. At the rate cashiers have defaulted for the past ten years, the terms defaulter and cashier, will almost become synonymous. Bank directors should draw the lines tighter, and not place so much temptation in the way of their employes.

In California you "pass your mouth" and takes your choice" in politics, and there is no lack of parties to choose from, as no less than five claim to represent the "dear people." There is Republican, Democratic Prohibiting, New Constitutional and Workingman or Kearney party. The golden state will be filled with disappointed office seekers after election.

Mrs. Inman, of South Arm, mourns over the loss of a pig, which was a victim to one of Jove's bolts during the late severe storm.

H. B. Hice has his threshing machine at work in Emmet county, and the Record, says he is giving general satisfaction. Of course he does.

A drenching rain storm prevailed through out Thursday afternoon and night, accompanied by liberal instalments of thunder lightning, and some hail.

H. S. Dale is negotiating with Fox, Rose & Barnes for stone from their quarry on the point, for his harbor contracts on Lake Michigan.

Jesse E. Swails has a new advertisement in this issue. Mr. Swails has a neat and well stocked little grocery and no doubt will receive his share of patronage.

The Little Traverse Independent still continues to exasperate that the world is marbled green cheese and that the present financial policy of the government is disastrous.

The series of political squibs on the fourth page of this paper, entitled "Outlawry, Democratic Sentiment" is from the columns Northern Notes. We omitted to credit it.

At the meeting of the Township Board held last week, G. S. Washburn was elected Superintendent of Schools, and J. M. Clark School Inspector, to fill vacancies caused by resignations.

We are in receipt of an anonymous communication signed "Observer." We never publish anonymous letters. We must know the name of the writer attached to the manuscript if published.

The Petoskey Record says that a field glass is to be presented to the City of Grand Rapids, bearing the following inscription: "Presented to the Steamer City of Grand Rapids by Nelson, Matter & Co., and A. B. Watson, of Grand Rapids."

A movement is on foot to raise a fund of from $5,000 to $10,000 to be used in improving and beautifying the grounds of the Charlevoix Summer Resort. Parties are engaged in working up the matter and have plenty of enterprise and some cash, and there is every probability that the scheme will prove successful.

S. S. Convention.—A Sunday School Convention for Charlevoix County, will be held at the village of Boyne Sept. 2d, 1879 at 9 o'clock a. m. to last one day and evening. All Pastors of churches, S. S. Officers, Teachers, and workers are cordially invited to attend and participate in the convention that a permanent organization may be made.

Tuesday the Water Dept. State Treasurer Pritchard was mit-steed to P. T. Harmon in Allegan last week. After a pleasant conversation which took place in the bank, the great showman said, "Well, General, if I hadn't found you in such good business, I would have tried to make an engagement with you—I think the men who captured Jeff. Davis would draw."

A. Fox & Co., have commenced driving timber-piles around their dock.

Marine.—The propeller St. Albans loaded here bound up Thursday night.

W. H. Powers, of Advance, went out to Lake Michigan Friday, after another ton of stone for his well. Mr. Powers is working up a fine business in this mill, and we are pleased to note the necessity of increased capacity.

Annual School Meeting.—The Annual School Meeting of Dist. No. 1, in the village of Charlevoix, will be held in the upper room of the school house, in said village, on Monday, Sept. 1st, 1879, at 8 o'clock p. m.

J. Milo Eaton, Director.

Common Council.—A petition was presented to sidewalk on the north side of Mason street, from Bridge street on the west line of lot 17 Block 10—(the school house). It was granted and the Marshall instructed to serve the necessary notices.

The dirt piles on the South side of many streets were displaced a nuisance, and the owners required to remove them.

At the next meeting of the Council, action will be taken on the Fire Department ordinance, after which steps will be taken to organize the Hesperine 91.

Shoe Fire.—A party consisting of H. N. Goodell and A. D. Carpenter, of Grand Rapids, and Geo. W. Miller and H. Cooper, of this place, went fishing in Lake Michigan, one day last week and came in with 250 pounds of Mackinaw trout, the two largest of which weighed twenty-five pounds each. They were caught in fifty fathoms of water, with "switch hooks," and the gentlemen are enthusiastic over the excellence of the sport. One of these fine fish was served upon the editor's table dinner on Monday.

A Regular Mess. The tug Payne, which is engaged here in loading the dredge, in hoeing out a dam across on Saturday, got a line in her wheel just at the entrance between the piers, losing control of the deeply laden scow, which entered the narrow passage with a sheer scow lying alongside the pier, sinking her on the spot. A skiff belonging to Inspector Nettleton was somewhere in the vicinity and got smashed to pieces, and to cap all, they were forced to dump the scow load of dirt in the river between the piers—so they say. What's the matter, anyway?

Personals.—R. J. Dean was in town Friday, but left again immediately for Saginaw, whither he had been summoned by a business telegram.

—M. J. Stockman left town for Cleveland on Thursday by steamer Fountain City.

—Chas. Hogan, of Marion, returned home from Canada on the propeller St. Albans last week. He has been absent about 1 year.

From the Record.

—A saw mill is now running at St. James, on the Beavers, and 400 persons have offered to donate $5 apiece to add the machinery thereto for graining. The arrangement will be entered into, but probably not the season.

—Father Werkamp, of Cross Village, reached Petoskey Tuesday night, his wheat crop averaging 45 bushels to the acre, and oats large too.

—The contractor on the mail route between Mackinac and the Beavers, having failed to make his trips recently, the mail is now carried from Cross Village to the Beavers in a fish-boat, twice a week, instead of once a week as heretofore. Should this route be found the most feasible, it will probably be adopted as the regular one.

The Harbors.—A second raft will be sunk at the end of the north pier within a few days. The superstructure of the south pier is nearly completed, and contractor Dale is filling up from pier with rock quarried from the point two miles west of the harbor. The dredge was out at day time about 150,000 yards which is about half the total amount to be dredged. Inspector Nettleton expects to have a chain put into the harbor of not less than twelve feet depth, and it will probably be master thirteen.

Bancombe.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Our brother of the Petoskey Record was evidently suffering from an attack of indigestion, when he wrote his criticism on our article of last week. The following passage in our letter reads as follows: "The water most of the time the bay is so rough that pleasure boating is simply impossible, while at Charlevoix the boating is always good, however rough it may be outside, and here the air is also much better." We did not say that the air was "purer" as he charges us, but simply meant that the circulation was better as there is always a draft between Pine Lake and Lake Michigan, either one way or the other. With this explanation we submit if our assertion was not true? From personal observation as well as from the testimony of old residents we believe that it was.

As to the relative morals of the two places, Petoskey and Charlevoix, they may be nothing to boast of in either place, but from the information we have received, there is a perceptible difference in favor of Charlevoix.

The Record is a spiritual patriotic sheet, but from the nonsense of its criticism we conclude that we entered the South, which, previous to its unpublishing, it attempts to meet with blustering and fanaticism what it could not refute with argument.

CLEANEVE.

That Arbor River Dam.—As has been established fact for a number of years, a project is on foot whereby the Petoskey river is to be dammed at the bridge, for milling purposes. Mr. John Mearns, who owns the property, and who proposes to erect the dam, was in town Friday, and stated to us that the enterprise is not calculated to injure the fishing in the harbor, but on the contrary will improve it. This is a question for experts to settle. Mr. Mearns has a petition signed by numerously by the people of that vicinity asking the supervisors to grant their consent. The Jordan river is the light of the with reputation as a trouting stream is of far more importance to this entire section than the saw mill, if the operation there will in any way detract from its trouting facilities.

(Correspondence Petoskey Record.)

Charlevoix.—This place has grown rapidly this season, and seems destined to become an important town. There is a beautiful site for a public park here, which the village dads should at once purchase and improve. A fine view of the surrounding country can be had from the balcony of the Fountain City House, the principal hotel. To the west and northwest are the blue waters of Lake Michigan, to the east, Round Lake, Pine Lake and the finest grounds with its buildings, which is quite a village of itself, while to the south you overlook the beautiful and busy village of Charlevoix. At the foot of the stairs you will be liable to see the smiling face of the landlord, who weighs a trifle less than 300 pounds. Fat you say? well, yes, but not lazy; he has no time for that, as his numerous guests will willingly testify. The amount of shipping passing back and forth on the river is simply astonishing. Tugs and vessels of different kinds are to be seen at almost any hour in the day, while as many as eight or nine vessels frequently pass down the river in one day, loaded with wood, bark and other products of the country. The people have railroad here until they are thoroughly tired, and now the principal topic of conversation is smelting works, which they say are sure to come, and which would be of incalculable benefit to the town, and much enhance the value of real estate. There are very many cottages in Charlevoix, and it is one of the nicest places on the continent for boating. The resort here, which is Methodistic Baptist, is open to all moral creeds and denominations. H.

Teachers' Institute.—A State Teacher's Institute for Charlevoix and Emmet counties will be held in this village commencing Monday Sept. 15th and closing the Friday following. Prof. P. A. Iatta, of Allegan, will conduct the exercises, and Prof. F. W. Warner, of this Village, constitutes the Local Committee. Experienced educators will be present to give instruction at the day sessions, and evening lectures will be delivered as may be arranged. Every teachers in the county is earnestly requested to attend this Institute. Should the date of the Institute occur during the the term of any schools, the school Boards are requested to have a vacation during the week of the Institute that the teachers may attend. Full particulary may be obtained upon application to local committee.

Following is the statement of Mrs. Senator Sprague in relation to the unfortunate difficulty at Narragansett Pier, which she has given permission to be published:

"My name has been used very freely in connection with the unfortunate affair at Narragansett Pier, and I have refused to make any statement, for the reason that I have been advised by my friends and counsel that it would be unwise for me to do so. I have been urged by many friends to make a statement, but have refused, as I have been advised

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, August 23, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

A ball is a thing that has a certain distance to the commodities created by the greatest and quickest light now being waged in this city. It appears that the ten dealers have given up chromos of late, and adopted as a bait for their customers who dearly love a bargain, the idea of offering some excessive stock of crockery thrown in with each package of tea, or coffee or chicory as the case may be. The thing has been so successful as to excite a marked impression on the minds and trades of the crockery dealers, and they are up in arms about it. It is hard to say why, for the goods have to be bought from them in any case, and it does not seem to the outside observer that it matters much who buys them, whether the ultimate consumer or the benevolent tea dealer. Perhaps, however, the explanation is that the profits of the trade are enormous, and that the tea man getting goods at wholesale rates and giving them away a thing to sell only because his own profit on his itself must be so great—utterly spoils the crockery man's cent per cent. The purchasing people are wild, and now propose to give away packages of tea to all their customers. Human nature is such that most people like to get something for nothing, and easily acquiesce in a semblance of that arrangement, artfully shutting their eyes to the facts. Of course it would be more common sense for people who want tea, or cake and sarsaria to drink it out of, to buy them at the lowest price as they want them at the legitimate stores for their distribution, instead of paying twice the value for either, in order to get a gift of something they probably don't need. Akin to this is the low-cost tobacco counter of some country dry goods and general stores which has sent the hardware people almost into fits. Their peculiar trade journals are full of the trouble.

A very solid Englishman, Webb by name, and apparently well-fooled by nature, has been astonishing us all by his wonderful swimming ability. Long ago he crossed the English Channel in a nasty, chopping sea, and established himself as a marvel of manly endurance, but his latest feat, a little cruise in the broad Atlantic, among some of the ugliest possible sea route, is even more remarkable. On Wednesday he started from Long Branch and swam over to Coney Island, ten miles, as the crow flies, seventeen in actual distance, as measured, owing to currents and tides. He was under contract not to land till late in the afternoon, when most of the visitors come down, and stayed more or less comfortable for three hours a little way off the land after the crossing. The water was so rough that the steam launch which accompanied the bold swimmer was nearly lost, and Boynton, the famous lifesaver man, couldn't manage to get across the surf to welcome Webb, which was part of the programme.

The unsavory remains of the late grand dry goods merchant, A. T. Stewart, still furnish forth a ghoul like feast for the imagination of enterprising detectives and reporters. It was long stated on very good authority that the corporeal elements of the defunct millionaire, were in the possession or under the immediate control of his very fortunate legatee, ex-Judge Hilton, but according to a prominent journal, usually well informed, this is by no means the case. It is gravely stated that Judge Hilton has pulled the wool over Mrs. Stewart's eyes, and persuaded her so strongly that it is difficult now to undeceive her, that he has already regained possession of the body; but, as a matter of fact, the rub, here are still agonizing for its restoration, and now demand $250,000. As a proof of their wrongful ownership of it, they have sent on a sample of the part of the velvet pall which they stole with it, a diagram of its size, corresponding with the piece now missing, and some of the silver ornaments of the coffin. It is a revolting affair.

There is a queer fight going on in Brooklyn. The city is undoubtedly and overwhelmingly Democratic. At the same time are clannish are the partisans that a large minority of the wards are Republicans. They all live together. Even a Republican block there may be one Democrat. In a Democratic ward you can't find any Republicans at all. Those elements of patronage about the City Hall in some way or another, and lord now there are some remarkably good packages, the terms of office of several prominent officials run ship out. At this juncture, Mayor Howell, Democrat, is dangerously sick. The acting Mayor, Ray, Republican, is very likely to. Mayor Howell can't go into the country or even try to get well for fear Ray will plump in a lot of ultra Republican nominations to his successor, the Aldermen being very nearly equally divided in politics. For some time the Mayor has held the fort and come down to his office to lie on a sofa all day and defeat the machinations of his party's enemies. Now, at last, he has grown too ill for this and proposes to transact all municipal business at his residence. The Republicans claim that he can not "carry his office round in a hat" and propose to run the local government in their own way. Several disgraceful and ludicrous scenes have already occurred in the Aldermanic chamber and the public are rather anxious to know what will be the upshot of it all.

The great walking match is another item of interest here. We have had plenty of walking matches, but are apparently not satisfied with them. In fact, the appetite grows by what it feeds on, and like Anthony Trollope's novels, each is a sequel to the other and a precursor for an indefinite succession. There is some trouble about where the next event is to come off. The Madison Square Garden, which is perhaps best adapted for the purposes of any public place here, although Weston's greatest, or at least earliest and most scientifically—chronicled feats were in the Rink, is in dispute. There are two sets of lessees for different months, and the earlier ones, who the others claim are stealing their thunder, and are not allowed by the terms of their contract to have walking matches, seem likely to reap a harvest. There will, no doubt, be one too for the other people, for nothing seems decided in these pedestrian contests, and the winner is say has to contend with any number of competitors immediately after his victory. In the palmy days of the prize ring, which was not, however, so generally popular, the candidates for contests rose from the champion were fewer.

Among us somewhere is, it is said, an aristocratic eloping young English lady, who, according to the London paper which advertises her disappearance, "can be very easily recognized, as she is tattooed on on her left leg." Now this is positively startling! Can it be possible that there are some customs extant among the British aristocracy regarding their personal adornment, which have thus far escaped the eagle eyes of American travelers and correspondents? It must be so, for the newspaper intimates as much, and newspapers are like Washington about telling lies. The only possible explanation of the matter that I can think of is that the custom of displaying this kind of personal manual is of so recent introduction that nobody has had time to cable it over here. As it is, I am going to put on a pair of green spectacles and go out hunting for this last damsel who is so easily recognized. Meanwhile our own elite are in a great state of mind over the discovery that there is an English custom that they have not copied, and I hear it rumored that a professor of tattooing is to be imported from Burmah, post haste.

Politic and Impolitic.

Dan Voorhees is announced for eight speeches in the Ohio campaign.

Senator Thurman has finally decided to quit sulking in his tent, and is incubating a speech for Ewing.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean's Logansport correspondent says that the Republicans all over the state are growing more confident every day that 1880 will once more place Indiana in the list of Republican states.

It is now definitely announced that Judge Sanford E. Church is willin', if no one else can beat Robinson for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in New York.

The cotton crop of the United States this year promises to be three hundred and twenty millions of dollars' worth. This is another stockbinger for the Democratic and Greenback prophets of hard times.

Col. Bob Ingersoll has given a Troy factory leave to issue an Ingersoll paper collar. It is expected to be the most eloquent collar in the market, but of such it subjoins tendencies that it won't do to wear it Sundays.

The Boston Transcript unfeelingly remarks that "as a beverage, Mr. Stor Wallace considers the Revere house coffee above criticism, but for purposes of naturalization he suggests that it ought to be a trifle darker."

A Greenback orator at Brunswick, Me., a few days ago said that the national debt is nineteen billions of dollars, and that the annual interest is more than two billions of dollars. He had probably been listening to some of Sam Cary's speeches.

Gen. Simmons, who managed the Hendricks-ed of the Indiana campaign in 1876, is out in an interview in which he says that during the progress of the electoral dispute "Hendricks was pretty nearly scared to death." Tilden seems to have picked up another friend in Indiana.

Wendell Phillips is informed by one of the Boston papers that he is likely to go down to posterity as a common scold. In 1861 he denounced the Republican party as bitterly as he does to-day. But now he says the party of 1861 "was the noblest political party this country ever saw."

Two or three weeks ago the weight of opinion about the prospects for a Republican victory in Maine was anything but hopeful. It was expected that the election of a governor would again devolve upon the legislature, and a strong effort has been made to secure a majority of the lower house, the senate being safely Republican. More recently all this is changed, and the strongest hopes are entertained of a sweeping victory for the Republicans at the polls.

Confederate Democratic Sentiment.

Our party must form state sovereignty clubs in every city, town, village hamlet and precinct in every latitude and longitude in our state-union, and these clubs must have a common understanding, a common purpose, and stand ready to respond when the tocsin sounds.

If a nation is proclaimed that nation must die the death; the life must be shot or solved out of the other powers in its creation, and the rank and file of its supporters must be disfranchised.

The radical party is the minority party in this republic. Taking the whole union into consideration, it has been the minority party since old Abe Linkhorn sneaked into Washington, disguised in a Scotch cap and cloak, and disgraced the white house forever by tracking the Sangamon mud over its carpets and polluting the atmosphere with his lewd, profane, jubilee presence.

This being the case, they must be checked in their revolutionary career. Their next usurpation must be resisted in a way that will teach them there is still a God—a just, Almighty God—in Israel.

Promise and serve.

What do those devils care for protests, or appeals, or facts?

They must be checked in their mad, rebel career by the avenging arm and the red right hand.

The Shermans, the Blaines, the Chandlers, and all that smothing mob of windy mad grinders, may call this confederacy a "nation" until their throats crack open, but they will never be permitted to make a nation in point of fact.

Their pestilent carcasses will long in chains and feed the vultures if they dare to subvert the rights set forth in the constitution by the old Continental Secession-ists.

Unite, Democrats! and proclaim this state-union dissoluble at pleasure.

Unite, and swear that the amendments shall be dorosted from the constitution.

Unite, and spit upon and trample the last remnant the sore, under the soles of your feet.

Unite, and slam to forever the doors of the free schools.

Unite, and vow that white men and white men only shall vote, hold office and sit on juries.

Unite, and tell the Grants, the Shermans, the Lenthalls, and the vulgar varlotry who train under their flag, that you stand to day where you stood in 1861, and are willing to fight the old fight over again with ballots or musket balls.

When the Democracy meet in the Presidential session in 1880 they must declare that the United States are not one nation, but a league of 38 separate, sovereign, throned, crowned and scepired nations, and this resolution they must stand ready to maintain with words and pantomic with bayonets.

The New York Sun wants the Democrats to nominate Winfield S. Hancock for President. He was one of those Christian evil-broods who helped to cripple and kill off the Democrats of this section in 1861–5. He has very few friends and supporters in the make that he resisted to join out with his rifle, and the New York Sun may as well move around for another candidate.

The radical party shall never regain the mastery of the south by the help of the freedmen. That much is settled. It will be war to the knife, the knife to the hilt and the hilt to the hand, first.

"But how will Jefferson Davis surround his political disabilities if we send him to the United States Senate? They won't let him take his seat.

Then whisper the few pale and trembling Conservatives that are left in Mississippi.

Jail, by, hoye!

The whole general government will be in charge of the Democracy on and after March 4, 1881, and the last vicious vestige of war legislation, including the infamous political disabilities in question, will be wiped out with a big sponge.

C. Wilding, D. D. H. The various railroads leading into Chicago will sell tickets from many points at excursion rates to parties desirous of attending the meetings.

THE HONEY TEMPLE in Boston was nearly destroyed by fire on the night of the 14th. The loss on the building, which was owned by the Ancient Order of Druids, was estimated at over $100,000. Several firemen were injured by falling walls, but none, it was thought, were dangerously hurt.

The capture was made near Poplar Creek, where the Indians were attempting to cross the Missouri River.

THE NATIONAL Archery Tournament which was held in Chicago on the 13th, 14th and 15th was a highly successful affair, and was participated in by clubs from various portions of the country. Will F. Thompson, of Crawfordsville, Ind., won the championship of the United States, making the best score in all the contests. Mrs. Sprague of Brown, of Hastings, Mich., won the ladies' championship. Several valuable prizes were awarded for the best shooting in the different contests.

THE crop returns to the Department of Agriculture for this month to the 15th show a slight decline from the condition in July. The average for the whole country was slightly over ninety per cent., a loss of two per cent. since July. The condition of spring wheat was eighty-two per cent., against seventy-five per cent. in the first month up to the 15th; a general decline, caused by drought, rust and chinch bugs; the condition of the whole country was seven per cent. better than last year.

IT was reported on the 15th that William H. Roach, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank of Washington, D. C., was a defaulter to the amount of $60,000, he having used the funds of the bank for speculative purposes. He is said to have made a full confession.

AS oil tank at Parker's Landing, Pa., was struck by lightning on the 14th, and the contents (18,000 barrels of oil), were fearfully consumed by fire. In the evening of the 15th the heat communicated to an adjoining tank became so great that the 30,000 barrels of oil contained therein suddenly burst into flames and were also consumed. BY the collision between an excursion and a freight train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad between Phillipsburg and Atlantic City on the 14th, a conductor, two brakemen, a news agent and a deaf mute were killed.

Personal and Political.

A RENCONTRE occurred at the residence of Ex Senator Sprague, at Narragansett Pier, R. I., the other day, between that gentleman and Roscoe Conkling, Senator from New York, in which the latter brought a shotgun to bear and threatened to use it unless the latter left Mr. Sprague. Mr. Conkling left at once, and it is stated that Mrs. Sprague also left her husband's home. The trouble arose from the reported attentions of the distinguished New York Senator to Mrs. Sprague. This is the version of the affair as published in the New York papers of the 16th and 17th. Another version is to the effect that the trouble was not between Senator Conkling and ex-Senator Sprague at all, but between the latter and a German music teacher, and that Mr. Sprague ordered the professor to leave his house because he objected to his methods of teaching, and that when Mr. Conkling interceded for the teacher Mr. Sprague resented the interference.

THE New York Tammany Committee on Organization on the 11th adopted resolutions declaring that under no circumstances would the Democracy of that city vote for Lucius Robinson as candidate for Governor.

A STATE Convention of the Iowa Greenbackers was held at Muscatine on the 12th. A State Central Committee was appointed, with George Hill Wilson as chairman, and resolutions were adopted endorsing the Chicago platform of March 4, 1879.

NEW YORK dispatches of the 13th state that nevertheless were pending between Jabish Hilton and the parties in possession of the body of the late A. T. Stewart, for the return of the stolen remains. The report that the body had been recovered was untrue. The price demanded by the robbers was $250,000, and "non-compliance asked."

THE practice inaugurated in the Sprague-Conkling difficulty maintained a profound silence as to the 1125, with the exception of Professor Lluck, the German teacher, who published a long statement in which he declared that the trouble originated with him and that Senator Conkling had no part in it except as a peace-maker. On the closing of the 14th Mrs. Sprague published her version of the affair, which substantially corroborates the allegations of Professor Lluck. She says Senator Conkling came to Rhode Island as counsel for Governor Sprague and on his own express invitation, to effect some sort of arrangement with the Trustee of the Sprague estate by which money could be obtained for the support of herself and children. Mrs. Sprague further says no hostile words passed between her husband and Mr. Conkling at her house.

A TELEGRAM from Providence, R. I., on the 15th says Mrs. Sprague remained at Canonchet the night before. Mr. Sprague had declared that he would have the children at all hazards, and had fortified the servants to obey any of his wife's orders without consulting him.

THE New York Sun of the 17th contains a lengthy account of an interview with Mrs. Sprague, who is represented as saying that she had sent for the reporter for the purpose of giving expression to her side of the sensational affair. She declared that she indulged in no recriminations at a recent meeting which occurred between her husband and herself. She says her husband is mentally jealous, but has not had from her the slightest cause for it; that his jealousy of Senator Conkling began more than a year ago, and that she knew of her husband having more recently written a letter to a friend in which he declared his intentions of killing both Senator Conkling and Professor Lluck; that she "considered there was no impropriety in Mr. Conkling's visiting her house for the purpose of giving advice about the management of the estate"; that she witnessed an exciting scene between her husband and Mr. Conkling, after which the latter withdrew from the house, but she heard none of the words used; that Mr. Sprague took his gun with him when he went after Mr. Conkling; that Mr. Conkling did not indorse, but disapproved of, the story, which was first put forth attributing the whole affair to Mr. Sprague's hatred of Mr. Lluck. Mrs. Sprague denies all the reports about sending notes to Senator Conkling on the night of the altercation. In the Senate Chamber, after Senator Lamar, and Rules giving any cause for public comment.

THE health officers of Louisville, Ky., were notified on the 11th of a case of yellow fever in that city, and the victim, a young physician who had recently traveled through the infected districts, was taken to the yellow-fever hospital.

THE Common Council of New Orleans adopted a resolution on the 12th declaring that there was then no case of yellow fever in that city.

AT a meeting of public health officers (members of the National and State Boards of Health, etc.) held for consultation at the hospital quarantine boat below Cairo, on the 15th, it was decided to continue for the present the system of isolation of Memphis, under the rules of the National Board, and to use every possible means to induce the colored people to move into camp and thus deprive the fever of material to work on.

COMPTROLLER POWDER, of the Treasury Department at Washington, stated on the 16th that the National Board of Health was of the opinion that camp life, now for the support of the people of Memphis in camp, was absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of the yellow fever into other States. A requisition upon the $50,000 appropriated in Congress would be honored.

A FATAL case of yellow fever was reported at Baton Rouge station, Texas, (twenty miles east of Memphis), on the 17th.

FORTY-SIX deaths from yellow fever occurred in Memphis during the week ending on the 16th. The new cases reported during the same time numbered 183—112 of which were colored. There were twenty-one new cases reported on the 16th (fourteen colored), and seven deaths (six colored). On the 17th the new cases numbered twenty-five (twelve white and thirteen colored), and four deaths (all white).

THE quietest day of the 17th says was the 16th the Cholera and Yellow Fever. Only one death from cholera and one from yellow fever had been reported up to noon, and only one new case of yellow fever had been sent in during the forenoon. The deaths from cholera in that city. It was thought the cases were sporadic only, and to prevent the spread of the disease a sanitary cordon had been placed around the hospitals.

TWO DISTINGUISHED English agriculturists, Messrs. Pell and Read, have been named as a Commission to visit the United States, to collect evidence for the Royal Commission on Agricultural Distress in Great Britain.

NELLIE GRANT SARTORIS, daughter of ex-President Grant, died at her home in England on the 19th.

SERIOUS riots occurred at Lurgan, Ireland, on the 15th, during the progress of a Home Rule procession. Stones were hurled at the police, who retaliated by firing on the mob, killing two and wounding others. Lord Lurgan's lodges and a house belonging to a Protestant were subsequently gutted.

On the 15th the trouble among the ship-laborers of Quebec culminated in a terrible free fight between the French and Irish members of the Shipping Federation and the Society of Longshoremen. The latter were opposed by a number of employers of the latter. After terrific fighting, during which five persons were killed and more wounded, the French party gave way and fled back. Subsequently a great many fatal wars stores were sacked, and all the guns and ammunition found confiscated by order of the Chief of Police. Several members of the Longshoremen's Society were arrested and placed in jail. The Mayor declining to act, the magistrates called out the military, but they were too late, and were practically powerless. At midnight the city was still entirely in the hands of the mob, and there were serious forebodings of what would occur on the morrow.

A DISPATCH was published in the New York Herald on the 15th, announcing the arrival of the Arctic steamer Jeannette at the port of Ingavern, in the Province of Onkara, on the Kara Sea, and that she would sail for St. Michael's on the 6th of August.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch of the 16th announces the blowing up of the tovernment powder magazine near the city. Several soldiers and workmen in the vicinity were killed. The magazine was undermined and [illegible] by nihilists.

THE Berlin Tageblatt says that Catholics and Protestants at Lurgan, Ireland, were reunited on the 16th and continued on the 17th. There was also a truce between the police and the mob. The latter were turning their attention to the destruction of Protestant churches. Many of the latter were burned in the fire. Several churches were also burned in the city of Belfast. Many persons were injured in the fighting, and a number killed. The disorders were confined to the Catholic and Protestant districts.

THE Russian Government has ordered the expulsion of all Chinese from Russia. The Chinese Consul-General has protested against the order, but without effect. The Chinese are to be expelled from Russia by the 1st of September.

THE Turkish Government has dismissed Akeko Pasha from the governorship of Constantinople.

THE Emperor of Germany has pardoned Admiral Reichy, commander of the ill-fated ship Grosser Kurfuerst, who was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for running down the Grosser Kurfuerst.

THE anticipated riotous demonstrations at Dublin did occur on the 16th, although there was only hand-to-hand individual fights and several persons were injured, but not fatally. Quietly was quiet on the 17th.

THE ALLEGED CINCINNATI ELECTION FRAUDS.

Thomas Shay testified on the 9th that the body of Harris' affidavit was in his (witness') handwriting, but before he signed it he took the affidavit to Hilliard and told him to swear to it and get some one to witness it. Hilliard swore to it before a man who [illegible] Hilliard, and that he (witness) signed it as a witness. Hilliard was present when Harris signed it. Hilliard, witness and Pat Bailey, witness to the affidavit, went to Harris' house. Harris was the man who was paid for making affidavits, over the signature of Harris. Witness was present when Harris signed the papers, but signed the affidavits himself and swore his names; he signed the affidavits in the presence of Harris and Hilliard, but Harris rubbed two or three times since the affidavits were signed.

James L. Bullis was sworn, and testified to the same effect as Shay. He knew Harris, and saw Parker fifty dollars to work for Butterworth; got more than one name in that fifty dollars.

The letters that had been presented to the witnesses were produced. A few days ago a letter from Butterworth to Hilliard, in which John [illegible] left, and other memoranda. The committee then adjourned until 10 o'clock.

Fall Curtailing.

As they now have a pretty rough lot of customers at the Bridewell, it was yesterday thought worth while to count and all the cells in order to see what was going on among the prisoners. Sticking into the lower side of a bench they found a large jackknife, which had been ground to a sort of dagger point, making it an ugly weapon. An ordinary case-knife was found which had been sharpened till it would shave like a razor; also, a case-knife which had been made into a saw. A three opium-pipe was found rolled up in some [illegible] and several bits of opium were brought to light, one bit being found in the possession of a white man. In one of the Chinese cells was found an opium-pipe manufactured in the jail, which is quite a curiosity. It is constructed of [illegible] bottle, into one side of which a hole was drilled a hole but little larger than a common pin. How this small hole was drilled into a substance as hard as glass is a mystery, but it is said there is a way of doing it as means of the point of a [illegible] pierced. In the dust of [illegible] were mingled rapidly between the palms of the hands. Several thicknesses of paper have been pasted over the bowl of the pipe to prevent it cracking when held against the flame of a candle in smoking, and a stem was fitted in the neck of the bottle, being a rice, cutting a groove in it, and then fastening the [illegible] together by wrapping them with a strip of [illegible] gummed paper, which is used for making bread. This rude pipe showed signs of having given frequent solace to its owner. The opium, it is said, is easily [illegible] and secretly evading, and a number of cells [illegible] Only six bits for recreant seats. I will now pass round the table with the tickets."

The Paris Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune tells a strange story of the Zulu war. In 1863 Captain Lambert, of the Fourth Voltigeurs of the Emperor's Imperial Guard, was caught cheating at cards and was expelled from his regiment. He decided to throw himself entirely into the service but if he said that to him the Zulus owe their knowledge of military tactics.

The Wrong Chandler. A Very Good Story.

Mr. Wm. E. Chandler, the Secretary of the National Republican Committee, arrived here last Wednesday and the next morning Mr. W. E. Chandler, an Assyrian acrobat and juggler, also reached this city from Chicago to fill an engagement at Woodward's garden. Last evening our State Central Republican Committee assisted by many prominent Republicans, tendered the former distinguished politician a dinner at the Palace Hotel at which there was represented an unusually array of political and financial jugglers of the party. After the steak-wrestling and wine-swallowing had in a measure subsided the company braced back in their chairs, closed their eyes to the attitude of earnest attention, and the speech-making began. Fourteen well-known politicians said that nearer in the whole course of their public career had they been called upon to do justice to an occasion more fraught with, etc., etc. Eleven heavy capitalists felt proud of the opportunity of extending a characteristic California welcome to one whose eminent services, etc. Eight editors remarked that as what had been said before, and so on the whole, as well said, very felt that nothing remained for them but to [illegible] their hands in applause, and to whoop to one whose signal abilities, etc.

The occasion of all this oratorical gaily encased the edibles and surrounded the Rooserer with a sweetness that had the ooziest of his constituents good, and when the [illegible] of the evening, Superintendent Dodge and the other on Senator Sharon's virgin dome of [illegible], and responded as follows:

GENTLEMEN AND FELLOW-CITIZENS—I am [illegible] to be called upon to say a few words at this late hour of the night, but I am [illegible] to say that I am not going to give you a speech. I am not going to do it. I can get away with any man in any line of [illegible] that exists on [illegible]. There still one of 'em kin keep [illegible] gamon balls in the air [illegible] and can keep it [illegible] longer than I can. I know it. I know it. There's that little Dutchman—Klopheimer—who bills to do my hoop conjurations [illegible] to fraud, gents—a perfect fraud. The hoop he crawls through with a glass of water balanced on his head is not the same one as mine, I admit; but [illegible] another [illegible], and can prove it. The [illegible] Chandler, and [illegible] evening, and [illegible] Chandler are still doing the foot-hills until the thing blows over.—San Francisco Post.

HOW POTTRIDGE SPOILT HIS LUCK.

Mr. Thomas Pottridge, of Smallborough, had been renowned in his native town for his constant run of luck, so that at the age of forty he was reckoned the "warmest" man there—an Alderman who had been twice Mayor of his city, a church warden, and a very popular character among the fair sex to many of his being a bachelor. One of two things more only were wanted to complete his happiness—namely, a good wife, a nice little estate in the country, and the honor of knighthood. Sir Coutlidge wished to become Sir Thomas Pottridge. Having long cherished this idea, and resolved that, if possible, he would not propose for the hand of pretty Miss Limy Dott, the banker's daughter, until he could make her a Lady, Mr. Pottridge sadled by thinking that he could best secure his object by causing himself to be re-elected Mayor, and accordingly he was so. Only six bits for recreant seats. I will now pass round the table with the tickets."

Bet Jefford—The Great Septuagenarian Juggler could consummate no such magical intentions he felt like one who tried alone a haunted hall deserted. The guests had quietly, but firmly, fit out, and as we go to press the miserable conjurations of the [illegible] Chandelier are still dancing in the foot-lights until the thing blows over.—San Francisco Post.

THE WIND-SWEPT WHEAT.

Past, faint and clear—
Pass on the sense of years in dreams we hear—
Hark to the chanting—faint of sleep—
And sighs away.
The world's hoarse voice—the sights and sounds of day—
We carry here the phantoms false and best.
The sunny joys, the shadows dire and drear,
The selfish griefs—the warmer love the rippled wheat.

From West to east
The warm breath blows, the slender heads stoop low,
As if in prayer.
Anon, more lightly tossed in merry play,
They clash and beat and sway
With resistless feet,
But never rest. Through shadow and through sun
Then on the tender midst of the wheat.

Dreams move in sleep,
Fall on the listening heart, and lull its cry—
Dreams, sweet and low,
Some treasured, half-forgotten time.
Ah, long ago—
What days we were sweet.
Happy as birds—
We kissed, breast-high, amid waves of ripened
And knew no grief.

Not for to-day—
Not for this hour alone—the sad sky,
So soft and colorless, shrills the dreamer's ear!
Of all that was and is and all that yet shall be,
It feels a part;
Loved sorrow, forgive pain;
The cool caresses that caress;
The kiss that burns;
The tears that, like a fountain, overflows;
The long embrace;
Proof that we might have known, but shall not Congregationalist.

We are in receipt of a copy of the minutes of the last general Association of the Congregational churches in Michigan, from which we glean the following interesting statistics.

On the list of 103 the number of Congregational churches in the state was 209, of this number 49 were under the care of the American Home Missionary Society. The total membership therein was 10,000 [illegible], 47,142. The amount contributed for benevolent objects the past year was $13,211.13. Amount contributed for parish purposes $18,107.67. Value of church property $388,16[illegible]. The denomination has been operating comparatively but a few years in the west, while in New England it has always been the leading church.

A special train will not remain in this country until after the presidential nomination are made.

General Grant is now supposed a Monkey to England to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Matthew Walsh.

It is reported that Gen. Cockrell, of this State, who is a widower, is to be married to Sent. Lyle, to Miss Lizzie Mongrave, the belle of Charlestown, Jasper county. The bride elect is a relative of Ex, and the prospective bride but 27.

How can the Democratic press explain away the fact that the negroes in Memphis stand and face the yellow fever, while they flee from the rifle shots and bulldozing whites. It is quite evident which they consider the most dangerous.

A year ago the Democratic politicians and papers hoped and predicted that success would be a failure. Now they are beginning to insert planks in their platforms claiming the credit of the Resumption act and its success.

Wexford county is still hot over the county seat question. Cadillac became a city to secure it, but now opposing such acts purpose to manufacture a purchase to prevent any removal by organizing a town out of only two sections containing only four acres.

The Pomeroy coal scheme is not meeting with very flattering success. In Paris where it should meet with unparalleled favor, because it is a French plan they propose adopting, but 150,000 shares were subscribed up to 8th inst, when the subscriptions closed.

Chicago had a National loss and arrow shooting tournament last week. Wm. F. Thompson, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, was awarded first prize for best score among the gentlemen, and Mrs. Spaulding Bowen, of Hastings, the Sault, the first prize for best shooting among the ladies.

A report was circulated from England a few days ago that Nubar Gregor Sarcaris was dead, which occasioned a general expression of sympathy for General Grant and family all over the country. Monday the report was contradicted, the minister having arisen from the death of Mrs. F. W. Sartoris, formerly Adelaide Kendle.

According to the report from Washington, the United States master at Monrovia, Liberia, reports the existence of a number of tribes heretofore supposed to be long to Liberia. They have formed a confederation which they denounce why consider the protection of England, whom they so still love, and also will open her's our present difficulties.

According to the number of acres of land homesteaded, the General Land Office Review says: "During the sixteen years that the homestead has been in operation, and to June 30, 1879, the number of homestead entries was 361,846. The average size of farms is about 110 acres, making the aggregate area occupied 40,153,706 acres, or 3,000,000 more than New England contains. Last year emigration was at its active time tides to 6,000,000 acres, representing the movements of 50,000 families to public lands, were taken under the homestead law alone, and much larger quantity of new land was also purchased from the Government and railway companies.

CHICAGO LETTER

"Norman," Having Got Home, Lets Us Hear From Him.

UPPER SENTINEL:

What a change in a few days! Dan week entering the beautiful river on Lake of Charlevoix, watching the combers as they come rolling in on the beach under the influence of a stiff nor wester; old Father Michigan had put on the white caps even the the sun shone over us, troubling not, again entering the last mile of our 187 miles on lovely Pine Lake, and by our fill of the good things, and the deep bed as ease conscience deserves, starting up strength and energy for the work of the coming fall and winter; trying hope taking a few trees to supply the head, or badly paddling our better half along the bays and headlands of the lake, as a small but much boat our friends had provided for us land to leave from the big city.

The days were so pleasant, but the evenings will live green in our memories until we can again tread the deck of the Nellie Booth, and again feel the ear-ly grasps of the kind friends we left behind us.

We came to take up again the burden of life where we had it down. How hot and tuffy the city seems after breathing the ozone coming from the pure air cooled by such immense bodies of water; for the quiet of hill-side and forest; from the to st stream, to the active city life; from the rural scenes where the bitterness of politics would unknown to the keen competition, the hangers, unsavory, unwashed crowd of Democrats, who politicians eager for place, bursting for blood, anything for office, even the scent of their own "pairty" are hunted to find a place for them. Talk of wages decreasing they wounded companions, they are liable in comparison to human scenes that daily crowd the offices and hall-ways of the city building.

The police force is almost the equal of Customs, Detectives, and Democracy heads being dipped off with a wave a word of warning, while even the firemen are trembling for their places, expecting the guillotine to begin wacking in their department. City officials are as allowed to have a mind of their own; and to express an opinion is to render themselves unacceptable to "the best Mayor the city ever had"—(?) for the Evening Journal states.

It is reported that the Mayor has spies in all of the engine and police stations waiting for men who are opposed to Democracy, and especially to his own appointees.

Such is the feeling rife in all the circles, while the worst elements of our society thrive and grow bold, defying the law abiding citizens, and the police powerless.

But another move in the ever chan-ging tides of city life, carries us many back to the days of Robin Hood, Little John, Friar Tuck, and the gentle maids of green Sherwood Forest. How pleasant the gathering of the archers, the raising of the bow, to watch the flight of the arrow, while well pleased hear to the flight as they eagerly competed in games. How pleasant the cheering, to offset a few moments suspense, the eye meanwhile tak-ing in the graceful drawing in of the bow, the sighting of the arrow, and when the twang rang out on the air, how quickly every eye followed its flight, until it rested in the gold proclaimed the lucky archer to be something beyond a mayor in the beautiful pastime.—During the shooting, a sparrow flitted over the grounds just as an arrow was on its flight, many eyes noticed it until the arrow struck it clear through the heart, dead as a stone.

The weather was a little unfavorable for the tournament, being cloudy at times and some rain, perhaps not a success than-ever, yet the bronze dress of the ladies and the spirit they threw into the sport made the gathering of the clans. The Merry Bowmen augers well for the next annual scenery tournament wherever it may be held. Michigan has been well represented in the tournament by a lady from Hastings who carried off more than one prize, scoring very high during the shooting.

Archery is a fine pastime for ladies, and affords the exercise they most need. Another year let some of the ladies of Charlevoix enter the lists for honors.

NORMAN.

The New York Herald of recent date says that the thieves who stole the remains of A. T. Stewart from the tomb now boldly demand $250,000 before they will return them. The coffin handles and knobs have been sent to a New York lawyer by ex-press from Boston, with a proposal to return the body for $250,000. Thus far the directors of the Stewart estate refuse to compromise with the robbers.

The Harbor.—Contractor Dutcher has finished his contract on Charlevoix harbor. The work done by Mr. Dutcher on the piers is very creditable to him. Those who know say the work can't be beaten either shore of Lake Michigan. The dredge has about completed the first cut into Round Lake and will return by the month of about this month. Enough sand to surround of the excavation fun, is to dredge the first width for a new entrance up from the mouth of the piers and bring another cut to the bridge. Inspector Anderson yet confident it is to have a channel of about thirteen feet deep. The contract is during the next few days, but some fill is expected, and it will not be opened now for. The sand and cost was $4000 Friday.

There Mr. Reuben Marshall, of the Northern Ohio Bank of Painesville, O., and Mr. Edwin Marshall, of Lorain and Mrs. Dr. Rumsey, of Banks and Mrs. Dr. Redmond, of Boyne City and Mrs. Postmaster Wilkinson, of Charlevoix. Mr. Reuben Marshall is a gentleman of the old school, and a pleasant visit to Charlevoix and Banks and also Boyne City and Petoskey. I have been questioned more concerning our fishing, than any other interest, concerning the fishing at present there, be said, for the present season, remembering the no doubt, is of extraordinary and lasting value. A gentleman connected with the house who owns a steam board yacht about 20 feet long over. He believes he can sail her up there, and is inclined to come up for a month during another season.

The Upper River.—And now that speculation of all questions with the Pine Lake people—the opening of the upper channel—is placed before us it is said and not upon. Of one fact there can be no doubt and that is that because of the present condition of the upper river, thousands of dollars are lost annually to the lumbermen and shippers of the Pine Lake region. It requires at least 32 cents on every thousand of wood which leaves Pine Lake for Chicago, less little, and carry it to Boyne City, while some loads of the same kind

Sprague vs. Conkling—The ex-Governor's Story.

BOSTON, MASS., August 18.

The Globe has the following dispatch from NARRAGANSETT PIER:

Senator Conkling has been in consultation with his lawyers, and absolutely declines to make a statement for publication directly, but an intimate friend relates the substance of what occurred between Mr. Sprague and Senator Conkling on Friday, August 15. The story came from the lips of Mr. Sprague himself. In substance it would not be permitted even now out of the habit of Mrs. Sprague.

Governor Sprague's version of the affair is as follows: He had been over in Maine on a business trip, expecting to be absent until Saturday night. He finished his business before he expected to, and returned late Thursday night, but did not see Mrs. Sprague, although he knew she was present in the house. On Friday morning he learned for the first time, as he stood at the pier, that Senator Conkling was up at his house as I had been there a day or two. The lieutenant was sharp, tactful, tenacious, and the cause of his anger forced to his friend, was the intimate tete-a-tete between Senator Conkling and his wife, which had long been highly distasteful to him. In revenge of these relations with his absent friend, he had seen the scandal growing and growing more and more particular, and he spoke plainly of the conduct of Senator Conkling toward his wife at Washington. Other words had often been exchanged between his wife and himself because of that intimacy. She was fully aware how obnoxious to him was that intimacy, and what were his feelings toward Senator Conkling. But in spite of this, said Mr. Sprague, in spite of all the social ostracism, in spite of his feelings, that she should invite Senator Conkling to be a guest at his house damaged his absence, and that Conkling should have the Executive offer to come there at all, in-censed him beyond all bounds. As he expressed it, Senator Conkling was trying to do for his house what Senator Blaine had already done for his home in Washington, and he had determined to put an end to it once and forever.

With this deliberate intention he landed here. Conkling was not in sight, so heard Conkling was there. Near the house he met Edith, the governor's daughter, but he did not recognize that he had no one with him, and had not seen her since she was a child. Her eyes have his gun with him at the time. He did order Hank to leave the house, and as he opposed to his being there, he, however, he came he had anything against the man himself, but because he could not afford to have also an attachment to his establishment, and he felt that the dignity of such extraordinary circumstances was injuring him in his efforts to save the wreck of his vast property interests and to get on his feet again financially. His brotherly game lasted long enough. Probably he did speak angrily, he said, for he was very angry—but he denies that he was excited. Conkling and not against Hank.

He found Conkling in the house alone, and ordered him out on the instant, commanding him to go. A few high words ensued, and then Mr. Sprague went to the door and called Hank to shotgun. He found that he had no occasion to use his weapon, and went off to the village to get some. As soon as he could procure them he hurried back, and Conkling was still there. He again ordered him to leave, and Conkling refused to go, and tried to mollify Sprague and escape himself from being shotgunned on the ground that he had no carriage for himself or his baggage, which was not even packed. Sprague, in the supreme dignity and wrath and total foolishness that a small grain dignity seems to get out, and insist he was not out by that time he would use force to get him out. Conkling then began to walk down the road, and Sprague followed him, and kept him slightly ahead of him. He continued these relations with his servant, and he refused to go to any house, and ran against Hank.

He continued these relations with his servant, and he refused to go to any house, and ran against Senator Conkling and Mrs. Sprague.

Finally, the governor cut Conkling short in an attempted reply, by asking him abruptly if he was armed. Conkling, bristling up, replied that he was not, that if he was he (Sprague) would not go on as he was going. Without noticing this threat, Sprague replied:

"Then go and arm yourself, and hereafter go armed. I don't intend to shoot an unarmed man; but I tell you now that if you ever cross my path again I will shoot you on sight."

With that threat Governor Sprague jumped into his carriage again and drove off, and Mr. Conkling returned to the cafe. This is undoubtedly a substantially correct story of what actually happened between Senator Conkling and ex-Senator Sprague.

Black Silk Suits for Autumn.

The furnishing houses are expanding the summer months in making up silk and wool suits for early autumn. The designs are French, and are copies of the models lending French dressmakers furnish for their best customers. A great many black silk suits are being made, as these are staple suits, and remain in favor, no matter what novelties are introduced later. Three or four different fabrics enter into each of these black costumes; first, there is the lustrous black gros grain of heavy cord for the principal part, second, the armure or arabesque velvet for panier, pauses of other garnitures, third, the changeable silk for the lower skirt where it is concealed by the overdress; and, finally, some plain satin for piping and for facings.

Two styles of making these dresses are shown; that which is considered most dressy has the panier polonaise for the overdress, while that which is most suitable for all occasions has a basque and a trimmed skirt. There are various arrangements of the panier polonaise, but that which meets with most favor at present, because it has so many new features, has the long fronts rounded away from a velvet vest to make bouffant folds on the hips, and its ends are gathered up in the back beneath a graceful basque. Two long breadths of silk are then added behind under the basque, and these are looped up to make the back sufficiently luminant. The vest of armure velvet comes to a sharp point in front just where the silk panier begin. The plastron of velvet is cut the same as the narrow side gore formed of alternate stripes of armure velvet and box-pleated ings of silk that extend from the belt to the foot; six of each of these stripes is a favorite number. Sometimes these stripes fall on a narrow box-pleating at the foot; the back breadths are trimmed with a deep box-pleated flounce of straight silk. The fronts of the panier polonaise are edged with rich fringe, such as the smooth chenille fringe known as seal skin fringe, and tassels of crimped silk tape.

The second design has a basque of simple shape, on which is set a panier scarf of figured velvet, which gives it a very dressy effect. The details of these suits are noted carefully for the benefit of correspondents who have asked suggestions for remodeling last season's dresses, and for making new ones in anticipation of the time for wearing them. The silk basque is round, medium long, has two darts in front, and a short side form in the back, beginning in the armhole. The side forms and the middle forms of the back are of the same width at the waist line. The panier effect is given by a broad piece of figured velvet laid upon the skirt of the basque. It begins in a point at the end of the darts of the basque, ascends straight on the hips, and is widened so rapidly that it forms four deep pleats on the hips, and these terminate by being sewed in the seams which join the side forms to the middle forms of the back. The middle forms are left quite plain, being merely piped on the edge with satin, and ornamented higher up with a voluminous bow of satin ribbon. There is also strings underneath the basque, beginning in the seams where the panier scarf ends, and tied black tightly to hold the panier drapings in place. The top of the basque ascends above the hips, and is widened so rapidly that it forms four deep pleats on the hips, and these terminate by being sewed in the seams which join the side forms to the middle forms of the back. The middle forms are left quite plain, being merely piped on the edge with satin, and ornamented higher up with a voluminous bow of satin ribbon. There is also strings underneath the basque, beginning in the seams where the panier scarf ends, and tied black tightly to hold the panier drapings in place. The top of the basque ascends above the vest of velvet, and is finished with a standing collar of velvet. The sleeves are coat shape, and are finished with a velvet cuff. The skirt is next considered. This consists of four breadths of silk, and is short enough to escape the ground all round. The front gore and that on each side should be made the entire width of the silk at the bottom, and be only slightly sloped at the top. The back breadth is the whole width, and has, beside, a small piece joined to each side at the bottom. There is a drawing-string not far below the belt across the back to mass the gathers behind, but this is not drawn tight enough to give the clinging effect for which it was first used. In many dresses this lower skirt is made of black silk that is said at one dollar a yard, as it is entirely concealed by the richer goods of the overskirt, but in the greater number the front breadth is exposed, and must, therefore, be of the best silk. To accompany the basque just described a flounce is used of straight silk ten inches deep laid in a cluster of seven knife pleats, with a box pleat of either silk or velvet between. The overskirt does not cover the plain silk front breadth. On each side it forms two graceful full draperies, such as shirred vests, or surplice scarfs, or the new shirred gutimpes that are inserted like plastrons in squares or in points. The only overskirt this consists of a short crinkled apron of the gay silk that is in full pasties on the sides, and is tied behind in a puffed bow, or else a flat sash with long ends. If this leaves a long plain front of the lower skirt uncovered, it is no matter, as all that is required by style is a simple border flounce, or else a cluster of narrow frills massed at the bottom. Embroidered satin trimmings are perhaps the most elaborate of all the garniture for dark silk. They cost from fifteen to twenty dollars the set of vest and borders, and are of dark ground, with a great deal of red, old gold, and jade blue in the embroidery.—Harper's Bazar.

Raymond's Blindness—A Practical Joke.

John McCullough, John T. Raymond and William H. Crane have been making things lively around Fourteenth street in New York. Mr. Crane arrived from Liverpool on Saturday, McCullough and Raymond met him, and they say the three found themselves Monday night in a little billiard room near the square. They had taken in Coney Island, Brighton Beach, interfered Corbin the Jew-killer, and returned on the cars. Raymond especially distinguished himself as a practical joker. They sat in the billiard hall, weary and dusty; conversation lagged, and Raymond fell sound asleep. Then a diabolical idea entered the minds of McCullough and Crane. They would try a practical joke on John T. Upon one of the billiard tables half a dozen balls were thrown. The gas was extinguished, leaving everybody and everything in darkness. Crane and McCullough then began firing the balls and shout the score they were piling up.

Bang! from Billy.

"A fine shot!" exclaimed McCullough. Twenty-one!"

Bang! Bang! once more.

"Fine carom. Twenty-five!" yelled Crane.

Bang, bang, bang! This went on a few minutes, when Raymond was heard to move.

"Where are you, Billy—John—eh?" said he.

Bang again. "Thirty-five."

Another billiard ball made the circuit of the table, and then, for the third time Crane, and turning to Raymond:

"What's the matter with you?" Why don't you open your eyes?"

"But," from Raymond, becoming nervous, "I can't see you."

"Wash your eyes," suggested McCullough. Bang again.

"Of course we are, and playing billiards," returned the two jokers simultaneously.

"My God!" shrieked John. "McCullough—Billy—I'm blind!"

McCullough says that the way in which this exclamation was uttered convinces him that Raymond is the best actor he has long claimed to be.—N. Y. Star.

The Rights of Travelers on Steam Railroads.

The following extracts from an article in the New York Times show the more recent attitude of the courts respecting the legal rights of steam railroad travelers in the matter of ticket suit at one dollar a yard, as it is entirely concealed by the richer goods of the overskirt, but in the greater number the front breadth is exposed, and must, therefore, be of the best silk. To accompany the basque just described a flounce is used of straight silk ten inches deep laid in a cluster of seven knife pleats, with a box pleat of either silk or velvet between. A Destructive Tornado at the East.

BOSTON, MASS., August 19.

Considerable damage was done by the storm last night along the New England coast. The yachting fleet at South Boston was fatally used. At Portland, Me., several yachts and schooners were sunk. Other towns along the coast report a long list of disasters to local craft and property.

NEW YORK, August 19.

Newburyport, Mass., the scene of a storm this morning, and it was the severest in ten years. The wind blew a hurricane, wrecking four yachts, badly tormenting steamboats and shipping in the harbor, and scattering about twenty small boats. The fruit trees were stripped, and the beach were leveled or blown into the sea.

At Newport, between twenty and thirty sail-boats are sunk or damaged. Three yachts have sunk at the wharf, while others dragged anchors, fouled and stranded.

The velocity of the wind at Cape May was sixty-four miles. Total rainfall, 8 46-100 inches.

The crew of a schooner ashore at Atlantic City were taken from the rigging at three this morning by a life-saving crew. The vessel will be a total loss.

Norfolk, Va., had the severest rainstorm and tornado ever experienced. Many buildings are unroofed and flooded, trees uprooted, and shipping damaged. Many vessels are dragging anchor. The Boston Steamship Company's warehouses have been nearly damaged. The wharves all along the river front and many of the warehouses have been flooded. The tide was higher than ever known, and the vicinity of Water street was only accessible by boats, the night last was by examined even to the "oldest inhabitant." The handsome spire of the Freeman Street Baptist Church was blown down; the slating of Christ Episcopal Church and the cornice and steeple ornaments of St. Mary's Catholic Church were torn off, while the beautiful grounds of old St. Paul's are badly wrecked. Great anxiety prevailed during the prevalence of the storm, and the Mayor ordered out the entire police force and Fire Department. The loss is estimated from $200,000 to $500,000.

The damage to growing crops in counties adjacent to Petersburg, Va., is very great. In Surrey County alone the damage to corn is estimated at fifty per cent.

At Gloucester, Mass., several vessels dragged and lost anchors.

Boston & Maine Railroad to Boston, thinking he could go on one and return on the other. Returning he offered his ticket reading, "Portland to Boston" to the conductor running out of Boston, but that conductor refused it and put him off. Lawsuit. But the court and the company could not be compelled to take the ticket except as it read, from Portland to Boston. The traveler argued that he had paid fairly for so many miles' travel, and it was just as easy and cheap to carry him one way as the other. The court said such a rule would make a great confusion to railway business; the company had a right to know, if they desired, which way travelers were going so as to provide the right number of cars and manage the trip conveniently to the public.

Nordenskjold in the Arctic.

According to the Nya Dagligt Allehanda, a journal published at Stockholm, a private letter has been received in the latter part of June overland from Lieutenant Palander, the commander of the Vega, stating that all was well on board of the steamer. The mouth of the Lena River was passed on the 27th of August last. In the beginning everything was favorable, although the Arctic explorers had to contend with ice and shallow water. They succeeded in reaching Cape Chelyuskin, but here for three days further progress was stopped. That point was left on the 19th of September, and after many difficulties they arrived, on the 15th, at Cape North, where they were shut up in ice until the 18th. After that the Arctic voyagers were only able now and then to advance, owing to the remote past ice. On the 28th of September they arrived at their present position in latitude sixty-seven degrees six minutes north and longitude 173 degrees thirty minutes west. Had that point been reached two days earlier the whole location would easily sail. At Port-land, Me., several yachts and schooners were sunk. Other towns along the coast report a long list of disasters to local craft and property.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Remember that butter made in September is second only to June butter, and that it is easier to keep up the supply of milk than to restore it after it has fallen off. The suckers from the corn-field, leaves from mangels, softended cabbages, or, best of all, some especially provided corn fodder or oats and peas mixed will be useful to keep up the supply of milk.—*N. Many bugs die every year of disease resulting from want of pure water, and yet this loss is submitted to year after year. The remedy is a simple one, and compared with the loss of hogs and cattle is inexpensive one, or dig a well. Want of water is productive of much suffering which results in disease and death. See that every animal is well supplied with pure water in abundance, and that the cool and foul spring holes are not fit to supply stock with water, and wells or cisterns only should be used.—Exchange.

—Professor Jennings, a veterinary surgeon, says: Wolf teeth are not injurious to the eyes of horses. The theory is purely fallacious. Neither are they supernumerary teeth, as has been asserted by very many clever authorities. These teeth are natural to all horses, and are, in fact, useful to them. All colts have them at a two-thousand-mile cruise. One or two villages of Esthonia-Livonia passed. These natives were believed to originate from Greenland, and, judging from their appearance, appeared to be of the four-year old Esquimaux. Their complexion is brownish yellow, hair and eyes jet black. They are dressed in reindeer skins, and boots of the hair and hide on the fat of the seal. They are, moreover, friendly disposed and accommodating to strangers. The women are tattooed, the men's not. Their language is very difficult to understand, but the Swedish explorers have already acquired it and compiled a Swedish-Tschuktschen dictionary, embracing some seven hundred words. Three camps of Tschuktschen are on the shore in the vicinity of the Vega's anchorage.

During September the temperature was never below three degrees, and five degrees Celsius was the coldest at any time. On the 21st December, the darkest day of the year, the sun was still above the horizon. The letters had been sent from the Vega by a visiting party of ship-wrecked Swedes in the neighborhood of Anadyrsk. The Polar explorers calculated to extricate themselves by the last of July, and to reach Japan by the 15th of August.

We are cautioned also to lay before our readers the following extract from the Freeman Street Baptist Church, we've blown down; the slating of Christ Episcopal Church and the cornice and steeple ornaments of St. Mary's Catholic Church were torn off, while the beautiful grounds of old St. Paul's are badly wrecked. Great anxiety prevailed during the prevalence of the storm, and the Mayor ordered out the entire police force and Fire Department. The loss is estimated from $200,000 to $500,000.

The damage to growing crops in counties adjacent to Petersburg, Va., is very great. In Surrey County alone the damage to corn is estimated at fifty per cent.

At Gloucester, Mass., several vessels dragged and lost anchors.

At other points on the New England coast vessels were beached, but thus far no loss of life is reported.

The storm at Morehead City, N. C., was the most violent which ever visited that place. At six a. m. it blew a hurricane from the southwest, a change which saved Beaufort and Morehead from entire destruction.

The Atlantic House, the largest hotel in that part of the country, is entirely demolished, not a vestige being left. There were one hundred and fifty guests in it, and there was not a particle of clothing saved by any of them. The people did not begin to leave until the waves were literally breaking the hotel to pieces—then there was a stampede. Thrilling incidents of the flight of men, women and children at the danger of their own lives. All baggage, furniture, etc., went to destruction. John Hughes, son of Major Hughes, of Newbern, lost his life in the wreck of the Atlantic House. The front street of Beaufort is strewn with lumber, trunks and goods, and crowds of people, some barefooted, are trying to identify their property. The Ocean View House, the other hotel at Beaufort, is damaged badly, and many private houses are ruined. There is not a wharf left in Beaufort, and only two or three of hundreds of sail-boats are fit to sail in. Morehead City also suffered terribly.

NORFOLK, VA., August 20.

The gale at Cape Henry was terrific, blowing out some of the glasses of the lighthouse, the first case of the kind on record. The damage to coasting vessels is very heavy, also to crops along the coast.

FORTRESS MONROE, August 19.

A tornado raged here yesterday, and the rainfall from seven a. m. until two p. m. was five inches. Shade-trees in and about the fort were down by hundreds.

A FARM laborer at Ardleigh, Eng., went to the help of a man who was being overpowered by a lunatic in his charge, and in danger of being killed He was absent from work an hour and a half, and was prosecuted by his employer for five shillings damages on account of loss of services, and the court decided against him for not getting permission from his employer before going to the rescue of a man who was liable to be killed at any moment.

Watering Plants.

Many plants are dried up by watering. Two gallons of cold water sprinkled over twenty or thirty plants when they are hot, and when the surface of the ground is hot, assists nature in drying up the plants. It does it in two ways: first, the sudden dash of cold water on the hot leaves checks the growth of the plant, and thus stops the downward progress of the roots, which in dry weather seek for moisture; second, because the slight sprinkling of the ground forms a crust out of the finely pulverized soil, and thus not only destroys what would have acted as a mulch and a new condenser to keep the heat from penetrating to the roots of the plants, but by its compact form the crust acts as a good conductor of heat to the roots of the plants, and conveys to them heat in such quantities that they are dried up more than they would have been if no water had been applied. Very few persons stop to make any estimate as to the amount of water fall on each rod of land per week. An investigator would be astonished to find the average rain-fall per week to be one hundred and twenty-five gallons per rod.

Experience teaches that if seven gallons of water is to be applied to each plant per week it is better to apply it at two waterings then at seven, provided the soil is stirred as soon after each watering as the ground has become dry enough to pulverize.

in watering trees and shrubs the water should not be poured at the trunk, but the ground for some distance around the tree should be watered. A tree of the ordinary size for transplanting, should in dry weather receive at each watering not less than twenty-five gallons.

Small, delicate plants should never be watered with cold water direct from the well, but it should be kept in the sun until it is warm before it is applied. Where plants are cultivated in hills several feet apart, all of the ground between the hills should be watered. When watering is once commenced, at least 125 gallons per week should be applied to each rod while the dry weather continues. Small fruits, like the strawberry and the blackberry, during the ripening season require large quantities of water. Those who have a few rods of small fruits will find their time well spent in giving them frequent and liberal waterings. A barrel upon two wheels with a sprinkler attached, will greatly lessen the labor of watering the garden. If the garden is near the well, a force-pump with a long suction hose is the best for hardy plants, if watered in the cool of the morning.

It is always best to avoid watering a hot day, but if it is necessary, and cults have them at a two-thousand-mile cruise. One or two villages of Esthonia-Livonia passed. These natives were believed to originate from Greenland, and, judging from their appearance, appeared to be of the four-year old Esquimaux. Their complexion is brownish yellow, hair and eyes jet black. They are dressed in reindeer skins, and boots of the hair and hide on the fat of the seal. They are, moreover, friendly disposed and accommodating to strangers. The women are tattooed, the men's not. Their language is very difficult to understand, but the Swedish explorers have already acquired it and compiled a Swedish-Tschuktschen dictionary, embracing some seven hundred words. Three camps of Tschuktschen are on the shore in the vicinity of the Vega's anchorage.

Nordenskjold in the Arctic.

According to the Nya Dagligt Allehanda, a journal published at Stockholm, a private letter has been received in the latter part of June overland from Lieutenant Palander, the commander of the Vega, stating that all was well on board of the steamer. The mouth of the Lena River was passed on the 27th of August last. In the beginning everything was favorable, although the Arctic explorers had to contend with ice and shallow water. They succeeded in reaching Cape Chelyuskin, but here for three days further progress was stopped. That point was left on the 19th of September, and after many difficulties they arrived, on the 15th, at Cape North, where they were shut up in ice until the 18th. After that the Arctic voyagers were only able now and then to advance, owing to the remote past ice. On the 28th of September they arrived at their present position in latitude sixty-seven degrees six minutes north and longitude 173 degrees thirty minutes west. Had that point been reached two days earlier the whole location would easily sail. At Port-land, Me., several yachts and schooners were sunk. Other towns along the coast report a long list of disasters to local craft and property.

NEW YORK, August 19.

Newburyport, Mass., the scene of a storm this morning, and it was the severest in ten years. The wind blew a hurricane, wrecking four yachts, badly tormenting steamboats and shipping in the harbor, and scattering about twenty small boats. The fruit trees were stripped, and the beach were leveled or blown into the sea.

At Newport, between twenty and thirty sail-boats are sunk or damaged. Three yachts have sunk at the wharf, while others dragged anchors, fouled and stranded.

The velocity of the wind at Cape May was sixty-four miles. Total rainfall, 8 46-100 inches.

The crew of a schooner ashore at Atlantic City were taken from the rigging at three this morning by a life-saving crew. The vessel will be a total loss.

Norfolk, Va., had the severest rainstorm and tornado ever experienced. Many buildings are unroofed and flooded, trees uprooted, and shipping damaged. Many vessels are dragging anchor. The Boston Steamship Company's warehouses have been nearly damaged. The wharves all along the river front and many of the warehouses have been flooded. The tide was higher than ever known, and the vicinity of Water street was only accessible by boats, the night last was by examined even to the "oldest inhabitant." The handsome spire of the Freeman Street Baptist Church was blown down; the slating of Christ Episcopal Church and the cornice and steeple ornaments of St. Mary's Catholic Church were torn off, while the beautiful grounds of old St. Paul's are badly wrecked. Great anxiety prevailed during the prevalence of the storm, and the Mayor ordered out the entire police force and Fire Department. The loss is estimated from $200,000 to $500,000.

A Miner's Luck.

A writer in the Boston Commercial Bulletin relates the following story of his experience as a miner in Australia:

"My bulldog, although an excellent watch and a good hunter, was anything but a water-dog. When I forded a stream he would run around half a mile to avoid going into the water. Many a time I had to drag him behind me when I did not want to part company with him in fording a river. As he was invaluable to me both as a watch at night and as a means of procuring me pork, I was in the habit of giving him a sousing every morning when water was available to preserve his health.

"One morning I took him by the nape of the neck and dragged him to the edge of the stream to give him his morning bath. Just as I reached the edge of the creek my eye fell on something that gleamed in the water. I released the dog in an instant, and he fled with a howl of relief. The something I had seen gleaming was a nugget of gold as large as my two fists. It was in the exact form of a bunch of grapes, stem, fruit and everything complete. I forgot all about the dog and his bath. A moment later I was wading up to the knees in the little creek looking for more. An hour's search reunited to my finding another nugget, a small one.

"I as once decided to ascend the creek for a mile. I was convinced that the ore had come from the source. I followed it up until it became so narrow and so shallow that I could scan its entire bed while walking either of its banks. Although it ran through a gorge, it had banks on both sides which were not steep. At the edge of the gorge, leaving a wide path" in places where the gorge widened out one side, or both, but generally on one side; that is to say, one side of the gorge assumed the form of a section of a circle. The stream did not widen with it, but the bank did, and in such places it was covered with rich verdure and occasional patches of scrub.

"I pitched my tent on one of these spaces, gathered some scrub and built a fire. The rats were very numerous here—the rocks were fairly swarming with them; and the moment I had pitched my tent they were climbing over and over it like seamen on the rigging of a man-of-war. Nothing but the fact that they had plenty of food to live upon kept these vermin from attacking human beings. Having eaten a hearty meal, I placed my dog on watch and descended to the creek. On entering it I discovered a vein of gold running in an oblique direction across the stream. I tried to pick some of it out, but at every stroke of the implement the water splashed up to my face. Some other plan must be resorted to. After surveying the ground I came to the conclusion that I could with considerable labor change the direction of the stream by cutting a semi-circular channel through the plateau on which my camp was pitched. I at once made this determination than I set to work. The labor was hard, but it was not continued. I had no sooner made this determination than I set to work. The labor was hard, but it was not continued. I had no sooner made this determination than I set to work. The labor was hard, but it was not continued. The knowledge that there was a strong probability of its being well rewarded. When I had succeeded in diverting the course of the stream I made an examination of its bed. Instead of one I found three veins of gold crossing it. I took out about six pounds' weight of the precious ore before sundown."

THERE is an old maxim that every dog has his day, from which we infer that this world contains the 3 hundred and sixty-five days and that the rest ought to be killed off.—N. Y. Herald.

A Wise Legislator.

He is successful because he has the manly courage to rise above all personal motives or interests and use his vote and influence on the side of measures which will contribute to the advantage of his fellow-men. The good of the town, even though it proves injurious to the interests of the few, is the motive of the wise legislator. But certain men will vote against the wishes of this doctrine, any more than some others, because they know little about their constituents. Of course, no man in his right senses will pay a physician $100 for a consultation, a bottle of bitters, a few powders, and a prescription, when hosts of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and a bottle of his Pleasant Purgative Pellets will do the same work, and more perfectly cleanse the liver and blood, reanimate and tone the stomach, and impart a healthful action to the bowels and kidneys.

THE cordial reception that Dr. F. Wilbeft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic has received at the hands of the medical profession in Louisiana certainly proves that it is an excellent remedy, and that the composition of it, as published by its proprietors, Whelan, Finley & Co., of New Orleans, is indorsed by them. Against Chills and Fever, Bumb Chills and relapses it proves the best remedy in the world. For sale by all Druggists.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

A VERY severe and destructive wind and rain storm prevailed along the Atlantic coast on the 18th. Great damage was done to shipping and to property in New York City and at other points. The rainfall at Baltimore, Md., was over four inches. The velocity of the wind at Atlantic City, N. J., Washington, D. C., etc., was reported at over sixty miles an hour. The heavy rain extended into the interior, and much damage to the crops was feared.

THE Chicago Times of the 19th says the Sub Treasury in that city had been notified by the Treasury Department at Washington that two new three-dollar counterfeits had recently made their appearance—one on the Globe National Bank, and the other on the Bedman National Bank, of Dedham, Mass. These counterfeits are pronounced photographs of genuine notes, and are likely to deceive, for the work is well done. They differ from the genuine in that they are of a much darker color, the numbering is clumsily executed, and the paper quality is put on carelessly, having a smeared appearance, and is entirely omitted in the space at the top on the back where the words "National Currency" occur. The Department also reports a new photographic counterfeit one-dollar note, which is of a dark color, the vignette being of a dingy brown; the numbering is coarse, and of a reddish brown, and the green tinting on the back of the note has a smeared look; the seal, instead of being red in color, is nearly a light brown. This counterfeit is pronounced a very clumsy one by Mr. Daniels, the expert connected with the Sub-Treasury in Chicago.

IT was reported from Washington on the 19th that despatches from diplomatic representatives and special agents in Europe continued to favor the opinion that the efforts of the Government to bring about the joint reconsideration by America and the leading European Powers of the bi-metallic standard question would prove successful.

IT was stated by the New York Tribune of the 19th that Mrs. A. T. Stewart's physician, Dr. Minor, had said to a reporter that Mrs. Stewart had issued all along that the body of her husband had not been recovered. The thieves first asked $250,000, but came down to $200,000. The Montreal dew was considered without success. It had been found that several reputable men in New York were connected with the robbers. Their names would startle the community. Judge Hilton had refused to compromise with the thieves.

AT Dish Creek, near Reveiks, Nev., on the 15th a conflict occurred between a Sheriff's posse and a band of Italian miners, which resulted in the killing of five of the latter and the wounding of six others. The Italians were engaged in coal-mining, and had struck for higher wages. Their demands were not gratified, and they then indulged in wanton destruction of property. It was to quell these disturbances that the posse was sent.

MRS. JOHN TILLINGHAST was fatally burned at Utica, N. Y., on the evening of the 20th, by the explosion of a quantity of kerosene which she was using to light the kitchen fire.

PRESIDENT HAYES' Cabinet on the 20th discussed the question of arrears of pensions to linemen of Soldiers' Homes, and laid the matter over to permit a closer investigation by the Attorney General, who was inclined to the opinion that the Managers of the Homes should be the custodians of the funds. It was stated by some that, as the Arrears-of-Pensions bill was passed subsequently to the last session of Congress, others at the home, the money there be appropriated should go directly to the pensioners.

GENERAL WALKER, Superintendent of the Census, was said on the 21st to be vigorously pushing forward the preliminary work of his office, and considering as rapidly as practicable the classification of subjects to be confided to specialists.

A SWIMMING MATCH came off at Newport, R. I., on the 21st, between Beldon and Webb—the former to make four miles to the latter's twenty. Webb was taken sick while in the water, and Beldon easily won the race and the $1,000 stakes.

THE Second Annual Reunion of the Veterans of the Northwest was held at Aurora, Ill., on the 20th, 21st and 22d. A large number of soldiers were present, and on the last day there were from 40,000 to 50,000 spectators. On the first and second days the organization was elected and speeches were made by General John A. Logan, Governor Cullom, Hon. A. C. Sherwin and others. The third day was devoted to military maneuvers, speeches by ex-Governor Beveridge, General Stephen A. Hurlbut, and others, and to a grand dress parade with the supposed Union Confederate Fort Wade was captured.

THE Commissioner of Pensions announced on the 23d that he had disbursed $12,030,000 of the $20,000,000 appropriated for arrearages of pensions, and thinks the rest of the appropriation will be absorbed by the middle of October.

THE American Social Science Association will meet this year at Saratoga, N. Y., on the 5th of September. The session will continue four days.

Personal and Political.

THE New York Times of the 18th publishes a dispatch from Narragansett Pier, to the effect that ex-Governor Sprague and wife were there at peace, and a reconciliation between them was certain. The latter had thought himself outraged by ungentlemanly conduct on the part of Senator Conkling, and wanted satisfaction. A statement was expected from the latter gentleman.

AN account of an interview with "Adirondack" (Rev. W. H. H.) Murray is published in the San Francisco Call of the 20th. That gentleman says he visited the Pacific coast to introduce the patent buckboard and see the country. When he left home he thought his business affairs were in a sound condition; the troubles were caused by a personal friend using on a small note and attaching his property, when the usual time of creditors started; his entire indebtedness did not exceed $10,000, and the property, if sold under the hammer at once, would pay it all off and leave a handsome surplus. He intended to return East in a few days and put affairs in shape.

AT Yazoo City, Miss., on the 19th inst., Hon. Lyman Ketchum, Independent candidate for Sheriff of Yazoo County, was shot, and died in the evening. One account says Dixon, while passing down the west side of Main street, was fired upon by J. H. Barksdale, Democratic candidate for Chancery Clerk, who at the same time advanced to the middle of the street, armed with a double-barreled shot-gun. Dixon halted and drew his pistol, when Barksdale and his party fired a volley at Dixon. Seeing this, Dixon moved toward a stairway, when Barksdale fired, four buckshot taking effect in Dixon's back. Dixon then fired several times at Barksdale, without effect. Barksdale missed the second shot. Dixon died internally and lived as above stated. The difficulty is represented by Barksdale's friends as of a personal nature.

AN Independent Convention, composed of both whites and blacks, met in Yazoo City, Miss., on the 21st, and nominated a full county ticket. On the 23d Dixon's funeral, at Vaughans' Station, was largely attended. Barksdale, who shot him, was admitted to bail in the sum of $15,000, without examination.

THERE was great excitement in San Francisco on the 24th over the shooting of Hon. I. S. Kalloch, the Workingmen's candidate for Mayor, by Charles De Young, one of the proprietors of the Chronicle of that city. It seems that for several days the Chronicle had been assailing the private character of Kalloch and of his father, who had also been a minister, and had reproduced the charges of immoral conduct against the latter in the papers in Boston and Kansas. On the night of the 23d, Kalloch, in a public speech, replied with as equally bitter assault, in which he applied the most obscene epithet to the De Young brothers, the proprietors of the Chronicle, and reflecting upon the character of their mother. The next morning Charles De Young drove in a covered coupe in front of Kalloch's study room and sent in a message asking him to come out. Kalloch, not knowing who had sent for him, instantly appeared on the sidewalk, when De Young shot him in the breast. A crowd speedily gathered and severely handled De Young, who would have probably been killed had not the police rescued him. Kalloch was shot in the left lung just above the heart, and also received a slight wound in the hip. He was alive on the night of the 24th, and his friends hourly survive the wounds because of his strong constitution.

The Southern Plague.

THE National Board of Health has decided not to furnish rations to those who remain in Memphis or other infected cities, and to furnish rations to persons in camps under supervision only for a limited time and under exceptional circumstances.

TWENTY-SIX new cases (nineteen colored and seven white) and six deaths (four white and two colored) were reported in Memphis on the 21st. At a meeting of the Howard Association, held in the evening, it was determined to withhold an appeal to the charity of the Nation until every dollar of money in their treasury had been expended.

THERE were nine new cases in Memphis and four outside the city limits on the 22d. The number of deaths was twelve, four of which were outside the city lines. The depredations of thieves had become quite numerous and daring, and vigilance committees were talked of. The Minute Men were receiving daily accessions to their numbers, and the police force was being strengthened.

A LITTLE child died of yellow fever in New Orleans on the 23d, the first death from that disease in that city since June 3d, and said to be the only authentic case.

THERE were four cases of yellow fever reported in Starkville, Miss., on the 23d. The origin was attributed to Memphis refugees.

THERE were thirty-one yellow-fever deaths and 185 new cases in Memphis during the week ending on the 23d. Yesterday's cases (ten colored) and eight deaths (six colored) were reported on the 24th, and the number of new cases recorded on the 25th was nineteen (twelve colored); deaths, eight (four colored). The fever seemed to be spreading in every direction. There were six cases in Chelsea, and several cases were reported in North Memphis, which portion of the city was cleared a week before.

A YELLOW-FEVER death occurred at White Haven, Tenn., on the evening of the 23d. A Memphis refugee was taken with the fever at Louisville, Ky., on the same day, and a case was also reported at Jersey City, N. J., the victim being a fugitive from Memphis.

THE Vicksburg authorities re-established quarantine regulations against New Orleans on the 26th.

He dealt over this, and could thus see the cards he dealt his players reflected in the lid of his box! A certain General of the staff observed this, and begged for the loan of the box to roll a cigarette. This request he frequently repeated, and observed that when the box was away the Baron had variable luck, like the others.

A native inventor in Surat, India, has recently exhibited some samples of dyed cotton by a new process. The specimens consisting of yarn colored yellow, orange, red, pink and various shades of green, have been submitted to chemical examinations, the coloring matter of the first two samples was found to consist entirely of compounds of lead, while the coloring matter of the three green samples showed a mixture of indigo and a compound of lead. Under the microscope, each fiber of the yarn proved to be thoroughly stained, and the detached particles of cotton floating could be seen, the conclusion being that the process is such as to insure fast coloring under all ordinary circumstances.

—A writer in an English naval magazine states that the best petroleum equipment for naval warfare, at present, consists of a steam launch with a platform near its top, which was lighted by one little window. The sole entrance to this staircase was from the second story of the house.

The tower was too dark to play in while the daylight lasted, and, at night, not to be thought of; so it came to pass that the younger folk of the first and second generations left it alone, and the third generation seldom explored its dim depths. The whole children of the fourth generation were about to venture an ascent. It was not for pleasure that they were going, but because of a great and sudden freshet in the Susquehanna River and in every one of its tributaries.

Ere the terrible adventure, Mr. and Mrs. Drew had left home to prepare for a coming celebration of the birthday of the great-grandmother of the children.

They had not driven more than twenty-five miles from home, when the barometer went down, and the anemometer went up, both at a truly surprising rate. The snows upon a thousand hills began to melt, and every dell would find a place to run, and they all ran together into the big, winding river. Then a billion or more of raindrops fell over hills and into rills, and they all got together at last on the broad, white, ice-paved river.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew found themselves in the midst of country roads deep with slush, and too far away from home to return that night. Before the next day dawned, a dozen little streams had swollen to impassability and burst from under their bridges, and it was impossible to return to Drew's Folly while the freshet lasted.

Not a neighbor thought, or knew, that the children were left alone at the stone house, with their very aged great-grandmother. And they, as already written, were about to venture into the tower.

There were three of the Drews and a cousin—the cousin was Dinah Crew.

Dinah was thirteen, and she carried a tallow-candle, whose orange-colored rays lit up the space around her yellow hair. Dinah's hair took up far more space than usual that night.

Caleb was twelve, and carried a tin lantern with tiny slits here, there, and everywhere in the tin, to let out the light of another candle. Dinah and Caleb went on, side by side. Roy and Wil—eight and six—followed them. Roy cautiously held the very tip of the bottom of Dinah's dress between his thumb and forefinger, ready to let go, without discovery, at the shortest notice. Wil longed to get hold of Caleb's jacket, only he couldn't, because his arm and the jacket were too short.

The procession wound up to the platform, and briefly surveyed the premises.

"Dinah!" Caleb was the speaker, and this occurred at the moment the four children had returned to grandmother's room. "Dinah, you know when father said we must not on any account touch one of the lamps to take them down and carry around, he didn't know this was coming, and I think we ought to take the big lamp and light it and put it before the window in the tower."

"So do I," responded Roy.

"It would be best to carry it up and light it up there," answered Dinah.

"Then, 'twould be a lighthouse," concluded Wil, after which the lamp was carried and lighted, the little panes of the window were rubbed with a newspaper to let out the rays across the waters, and there, all in the same minute, the children remembered that it was nearly nine of the clock, and nobody had had a bit of supper.

"Caleb had led the cow and her calf into the kitchen when the water had risen to the foundations of the house; not that he thought it would rise much higher, but, since father and mother were both away, he deemed it best to have everything as snug as possible while the freshet should last. Caleb was a thoughtful boy, and when the water oozed into the kitchen itself, he began to think it time to prepare for anything that might happen, hence, the lad up the tower, in readiness for Grandmother's removal, although it was to be hoped that such an emergency might not present itself.

The calf had been pulled up the staircase, and, at that moment, was shut up in a closet.

"What would you do, Dinah?" questioned Caleb; "the water rises every minute. Must we shut the door and let the cow drown? O, Dinah! I can't bear to."

"Can cows go upstairs?" questioned Dinah.

"Wait a minute!" laughed Dinah, nearly overturning Wil as she ran up, and, carrying him with her, she entered the room where Grandmother was. Going up to her she said:

"Don't you be frightened, Grandma, if you hear lots of noise; it's only Caleb getting the cow and I are going to do so."

"Oh mercy sakes alive!" groaned the feeble old soul. "Don't go out-doors and get carried down the River, don't."

Dinah bade Roy and Wil not to leave the room, and went out, closing the door behind her.

"Dear me! what is she going to do?" R-o-y, come here and tell me."

"Grandma, don't you be scared," Roy cautiously raised the heavy sash. In came the cold wind and the colder breath from the great oakes of ice that went surging past the stones of the house; for the river had broken up. The sight was appalling! One young monument it was carried away, their interest was so great that they and not perceive that they, also, were standing in wet places.

Dinah held her position by the stove until the feast was made, notwithstanding the rising flood about her feet. During this time, Mr. Drew and the boys flew to and fro, putting things on the topmost places that could be found; barrying eatables and bedding into the tower, adding, now and then, a pitying word for the poor cow, who grew restless again as she felt the cold flood about her feet.

Everybody wondered how much longer the river would continue to rise, and, "Oh! dear, what should we have done if father and mother hadn't gone?" was a foot of water through which, at the last moment, grandmother was borne in as many wrappings as any mummy. She was carried aloft by her grandson, laid down on the feather-bed and kindly ministered to by her great-grandchildren, who forgot their own discomforts in the fear that she would never be able to reach the wonderful birthday.

It was twelve o'clock, at last, just the midnight hour, when Caleb brought up the news that he'd been bobbing a watch on the stairs and watching full fifteen minutes, and the water hadn't covered up one more splinter in all that time, and that he could hear the cow knocking her horns and the calf crying, and he just guessed the flood would begin, in a minute, to go down.

Caleb's "guess" became a fact. The river receded as rapidly as it had risen, and the morning sun saw a mighty freed of waters still bearing down cakes of ice, but it had left banks of ice that it had piled in its progress.

It was past noonday, however, before the carpets were taken up, and the floor sufficiently dry to admit of grandmother's return to her own bed, which had been raised up just far enough to escape the water.

It was three days before Mrs. Drew could reach her home; so many bridges had been carried away, that she had to travel many miles to cross the swollen streams, and, when the Drews and the Crows and the relatives of other names gathered to celebrate the centennial anniversary, grandmother was three whole days more than a hundred years old.

"It's worth living a hundred years for," she said, "to see justice done to father at last, and to have everybody know that the folly part belonged to them that named it and not to him. I wish he was here now to see it; but I shall soon be going to tell him all about it, and his old neighbors that used to pester him so about it, they'll be sure to hear it, too, George," she continued, after a minute's enjoyment of her fancy, "G—eo—ge!" and her weakline eyes flashed a little.

"Here I am, grandmother."

"George," she said, "if I was you I'd call this place Drew's Wisdom hereafter."

"Hurrah for Drew's Wisdom!" shouted the three Drews and the Crow who had participated in the flood.

"How much noise you all do make!" said grandmother. "I'm getting old and tired. I guess you'd better go away now, and let me have a little sleep." Susan P. Pritchard, in St. Nicholas for September.

DREW'S FOLLY.

"Drew's Folly," as the neighbors named it, was a stone house on a river's bank, with a tower, or rather a watch-tower on its northern side. The tower did not require any repairs during the building of the house, for there was little of it liable to go to decay, only the rudest kind of a staircase winding around and around in the darkness up to a platform near its top, which was lighted by one little window. The sole entrance to this staircase was from the second story of the house.

The tower was too dark to play in while the daylight lasted, and, at night, not to be thought of; so it came to pass that the younger folk of the first and second generations left it alone, and the third generation seldom explored its dim depths. Cements, Mastics and Concretes.

Many of our readers have occasion to use cements or mastics, especially in putting down cellar floors or making the old walls tight. They will find the following hints upon the subject valuable:

A cement of one part sand, two parts ashes and three parts clay, mixed with oil, makes a very hard and durable substance like stone, and is said to resist the weather almost like marble.

Damp brick walls are common, especially in houses in the country where they are exposed upon the north and east sides. So common is this that, in many places in the country, a strong prejudice exists against brick houses on account of their constant dampness. Last year a gentleman having a brick house exposed on all sides, and suffering from dampness in the kitchen, which was in a wing upon the most exposed side, tried an experiment which has proved very satisfactory. A layer of the best English Portland cement was purchased, and a common tin wash basin used for mixing it. The cement was mixed with water till about the consistency of cream, and then applied thickly with a large paint brush. Of course the mixture had to be constantly stirred to prevent the cement from settling to the bottom. And on account of its very rapid setting it could only be mixed in very small quantities; half a gallon is about as large a quantity as can be handled at a time. When first dried it seemed somewhat of a failure, because it could be so easily brushed off, but after it had had twenty-four hours to harden it formed a strong, durable coating. The result is a cement that, somewhat like Ohio stone. This coating kept the wall perfectly dry, and as it is not expensive and does not need skillet labor in its application, ought to be extensively used. We do not know just what Portland cement (English) is worth at the present time, but the last quotation was about three dollars per barrel in New York. The gentleman who put on the cement suggests that a damp or foggy or misty day is best for its application. The coating should be brushed into all the crevices and openings of the work, and it may be found desirable to apply two coats in order that all the openings, etc., may be completely closed.

Cement is much stronger than mortar, and can be used to great advantage in many places instead of lime, even in the face of the fact that it is much more costly than lime, except in a few favored localities where it is made. The usual proportions are one part of the hydraulic lime to five of sand. In pointing, the proportion is sometimes as low as three parts sand to one of the hydraulic lime or cement. Coarse clean sand—almost pebbles—can be used to the extent of three parts to one of the cement. Some advise mortar to be allowed to set, and then wet and worked again. This course will not answer with cement, which is greatly injured by such a method of working. The greatest enemy of both mortar and cement is the frost. The power with which water expands at the freezing point is practically unlimited, and where it penetrates into the crevices and pores of mortar and freezes, or when wet mortar is allowed to freeze, its strength is destroyed.

For making floors, the following method is said to produce very desirable results: Four parts coarse gravel, or broken stone and sand, and one part each of lime and cement, are mixed in a shallow box, and well shoveled over from end to end. The sand, gravel and cement are mixed together dry. The lime is slacked separately and mixed with just enough water to cement it well together. Six or eight inches of the mixture is then put on the bottom and when well set another coating is put on, consisting of one part cement and two of sand. This will answer for making the bottom of a cistern that is to be connected up directly upon the ground without a lining of brick. This will also form a very good cellar floor.—Iron Age.

To that end it is essential that our methods of training shall cease to foster the silly and abusive preference for so-called gentlemanly pursuits—shall squarely face the fact and the world labor; a labor in which the great majority of the human race are destined to move, and that it is such and genuine work, have transformed the world, and which should command the highest prizes in the world's gift.—N. —Referring to the subject of a course of study for the upgraded schools, the Wisconsin Journal of Education remarks: "Kansas has any other feature of public instruction exceeded the rapid progress in such brief time as this has since it was before the people. It has come to be an absorbing topic in all our general educational gatherings. The many points in this course are accepted by all the differences of opinion exist in reference to its details and the best methods for securing its adoption. As usual, some are impatient at the seeming delays and needful caution employed in establishing so large a movement. They should remember that it has taken twenty-five years to introduce the present system of graded schools, and this under much more favorable conditions."

ONE OF THOSE GREAT STEEL ZEBS TO LOCATE ON OUR INLAND LAKE.

An Iron Furnace to be Erected on Pine Lake This Fall

For many years the Sentinel has at times given an estimate of the amount of old style machinery in the different lines of business here, and especially have we taken pains to point out the fact that no manufacturing Pine Lake could be an open field of profitable adventure for the smart factory of the state. It has seemed to us that such a business as could and did bring outside manufactured goods to our doors, and ship our products away, would have but few local competitors to contend with, and would soon be in a prosperous condition.

On Tuesday of last week two of the gentlemen came into our office, and during which time they thoroughly examined the business suggested, and how to develop and control their resources, which resulted in the following

AGREEMENT.

A survey of the town of Pine Lake, and the lines which were necessary to be run, to locate the Depot, Warehouses, and the business portion of the village, and the location of the Furnace, Machine shops, etc., and the dimensions of land to be conveyed from these different lines to the Depot, and the Furnace. There are many buildings in that vicinity that are desirable to own, but we believe it advisable to say that the most of the land that will be the site of the village, and the Furnace, is owned by who will be the business headquarters of the company, and have the management of the work will be conducted with the same liberality as has been exercised in the past here. The Furnace from present indications will be located on the north side of the Depot. The proposed contract for the site is about 2,000 feet, and the distance which it will have to be graded to connect with the main line of the railroad is about 1,000 feet. The contract for the grading of the road bed, and the building of the Furnace will be let as soon as the plans and specifications can be prepared, which will be in a few days.

The furnace is to be of the usual style of charcoal blast furnaces, and will cost about $100,000, aside from its working capital. It will be constructed entirely of iron and fire-brick, and will embrace all the most modern improvements in machinery and material. The proprietors have not yet fully decided whether the wood which will all be used near the furnace or scattered about the line, but in either event about fifteen hands will be employed, each having a capacity of fifty cords. A large boarding house will be erected for the accommodation of these workmen, and ground floor laid for those who have families, upon which to erect cottages.

THE CONSTRUCTION.

If everything works smoothly, work upon the furnace will be commenced early in October, and they hope to have the foundations and stone work completed, and perhaps the kilns. They have already contracted for the brick and iron work, and the latter is now in process of manufacture. They will spend the work forward in such a manner that all will be in order it can be in blast about early in July next.

THE FARMERS.

The real benefits to be derived by our farmers by an undertaking of the kind must be in the fact that instead of coming from our County for markets for their products, they will find a home market at their very doors. Not only will the farmers of Antrim, upon the south, and Charlevoix upon the north, be benefited by the location of the furnace, but the farmers of Pine Lake country will find a ready market for their products. Pine Lake country is a good one for farming purposes, and there is no reason why it should not be settled up rapidly. Pine Lake country is a good one for farming purposes, and there is no reason why it should not be settled up rapidly. Pine Lake country is a good one for farming purposes, and there is no reason why it should not be settled up rapidly.

WONDERS OF NATURE.

Plants Have Their Waking and Sleeping Hours Linnæus' Floral Clock Floral Barometers, Etc.

Most of the flowers sleep during the night. The marigold goes to the bed with the sun. Many plants are so sensitive that their leaves close during the passage of a cloud. The dandelion opens at five or six in the morning, and shuts at nine in the evening, the daisy opens its day's eye to meet the early beams of the morning sun. The ivy-leaved lettuce opens at eight in the morning and closes forever at four in the afternoon. The night-flowering cereus turns night into day. It begins to expand its magnificent sweet-scented blossoms in the twilight, it is in full bloom at midnight, and closes forever at the dawn of day. In a clover field not a leaf opens until after sunrise. There are some plants that may be used as weather prophets. The pimpernel spreads its leaves at the end of wet weather, while the different species of clover contract theirs. If the chickweed droops and its flowers are not open, there is rain in prospect. The crowfoot anemone foretells the coming of rain by closing its blossoms; the anemone nemalis carries its flowers erect when the weather is fine, and drooping when overcast. It will rain if the whitlow grass bends its leaves back downward. If the gallium verum swells and exhales strongly, also if the birch scents the air.

The sensitiveness of plants to light, heat and moisture was made by Linnæus, the great botanist, the basis of many experiments and observations, resulting in the arrangement called his "floral clock." It is a curious fact that there are comparatively few species of plants whose blossoms open successively at the different hours of day and night. The flowers of the water-lily close and sink into the water precisely at sunset, rise again to the surface and expand with sunrise. Pliny described the lotus of the Euphrates, which followed the same order; and the reverence which was paid to the lotus by the Egyptians is supposed by some to be from this association with the Sacred Sun. Flowers and fruits of the lotus are engraven on Eastern tombs and monuments, and adorn the heads of their sculptured deities. Besides the "floral clock," there is a floral calendar, in which each month is marked by its own loyal flower.

It is well known that plants sleep at night, but their hours of sleeping are a matter of habit, and may be disturbed artificially, just as a cock may be waked up to crow at an untimely hour by night on a lantern. A French chemist subjected a sensitive plant to experiments trying course of discipline, by completely changing its hours, exposing it to a bright light at night, and putting it in a dark room during the day. The plant appeared to be much puzzled at first. It opened and closed its leaves irregularly, sometimes nothing in spite of the artificial sun that shed its beams at midnight, and sometimes waking up, from force of habit, to find the chamber dark in spite of the time of day. Soon after the trammels of use and wont. But, after an obvious struggle, the plant submitted to the change, and accepted the night for the day without any apparent ill effects.

We notice that an Italian chemist has recently made some experiments which have resulted in the discovery that vegetable perfumes exercise a positively healthful influence upon the atmosphere by absorbing its carbon and ozone, and thus increasing its oxydizing influences. The essences found to develop the largest quantity of ozone are those of the cherry, laurel, clover, lavender, mint, juniper, lemon, fennel and bergamot; those that give smaller quantities are anise, nutmeg and thyme. Flowers destitute of perfume do not develop ozone, and those which have but slight perfume develop it only in small quantities. Reasoning from these facts, the professor recommends the cultivation of flowers in unhealthy districts and in all places infested with animal emanations, on account of the powerful oxydizing influence of ozone. The inhabitants of such regions should, he says, surround their houses with beds of basil, odorous flowers. There is a mystery about perfume. It eludes the most subtle analysis. So fine, so subtle, so impenderable, it has eluded our most delicate manœuvres and our strongest lenses. If we could come to the essence of each odor we would make an enormous stride in hygiene and in chemistry, and no profession would profit so much by it as the medical profession. If it could be conclusively demonstrated that such an odor proceeded from such and such a cause, as we already know of sulphur, sulphuretted hydrogen, ammonia, and the like.

> Who has not heard of the Vale of Cashmere,
> With its roses, the emblem that exists ever
> Sighing Tom Moore, the poet of roses. But since then cultivation has made Europe the rival of Asia in its roses. The rose gardens of France are celebrated. Acres of roses bloom in them for the perfumer. The heliotrope, eugenotile and other floral plants are found side by side with them in dense masses. The air is heavy with almost sickening fragrance, and for miles around the breezes bear the sweet tidings that they have "blown over the gardens of Gaul in their bloom." Within thirty miles of London lavender fields have become quite an extensive and recognised industry, and there is annually produced, in England alone, sufficient oil from the plant to manufacture 30,000 gallons of spirits of lavender, beside a large quantity, the oil of which is unknown, to be used in the production of other perfumes with more pretentious names. the plant is at its best between three years of age and seven. The harvest time is the first week in August. The flowers are then cut and taken to the distillery, followed by innumerable bees, which insects are especially fond of them. There the essential oil is pressed out, ready to be mixed with the proper ingredients to make lavender water.

Crosnie, in the "Natural Wealth of California," says that most of the flowers, though gorgeous in color, are without odors. But nature always compensates itself, and the deficiency of fragrance in the flowers is supplied by the aromatic shrubs and vines which abound everywhere. Mint, rosemary, sweet-scented shrub, sage and fennel may be found crowded together in many parts of Los Angeles. They are more rare in Northern California.

Nature is more intelligent and has a more subtle power than the most skillful chemist. She produces brilliant and manifold colors in flowers and fruit, and an infinite variety of odors. The chemist is not only unable to produce them, but he does not understand the causes or the methods of their appearance. A flower garden perfumes the air with wonderful feats than the most extensive laboratory. A careful analysis of the orange plant has revealed that it elaborates three different kinds of valuable oil, each with a pungent odor. One of these is peculiar to the leaves, a second to the flower, and a third to the rind of the fruit. They are so different from each other in smell and taste, in weight and density, and in all physical and chemical properties, that they cannot be mistaken or confounded. Here, then, is a single plant able to manufacture from light, moisture and the soil three different substances. The most subtle chemist can do nothing like this. Man may confess that nature is more cunning than he

M. Chatin some time ago called attention in the French Academy to some curious periodical movements in the leaves of Abies Nordmanniana, which are within the lower surface and open on the upper. If the tree (which is a species of fir) be observed early in the morning, or about sunset, the cuticle of the foliage seems uniformly whitish; whereas, in the course of the day, the green tint seems predominant. This is found to result from an alteration in the position of the leaves, so that they present now their upper surface to the eye of the observer, and a diurnal position can thus be distinguished from a nocturnal one.

The varieties of actinia, properly known as sea-anemones, will never cease to be wonderful. They were formed of every tint, white, gray, red, yellow, orange, lilac, azure, green. There is one beautiful species with violet tentacles pointed with white; another white-red tentacles speckled with gray; a third spreads out green arms edged with a circle of coral white. Yet another, unlike the polyp of the coral, has powers of locomotion, though its progress is very slow. When it wishes to move, it lays hold with its tentacles, and sometimes waking up, from force of habit, to find the chamber dark in spite of the time of day. Soon after the trammels of use and wont. But, after an obvious struggle, the plant submitted to the change, and accepted the night for the day without any apparent ill effects.

We notice that an Italian chemist has recently made some experiments which have resulted in the discovery that vegetable perfumes exercise a positively healthful influence upon the atmosphere by absorbing its carbon and ozone, and thus increasing its oxydizing influences. The essences found to develop the largest quantity of ozone are those of the cherry, laurel, clover, lavender, mint, juniper, lemon, fennel and bergamot; those that give smaller quantities are anise, nutmeg and thyme. Flowers destitute of perfume do not develop ozone, and those which have but slight perfume develop it only in small quantities. Reasoning from these facts, the professor recommends the cultivation of flowers in unhealthy districts and in all places infested with animal emanations, on account of the powerful oxydizing influence of ozone. The inhabitants of such regions should, he says, surround their houses with beds of basil, odorous flowers. There is a mystery about perfume. It eludes the most subtle analysis. So fine, so subtle, so impenderable, it has eluded our most delicate manœuvres and our strongest lenses. If we could come to the essence of each odor we would make an enormous stride in hygiene and in chemistry, and no profession would profit so much by it as the medical profession. If it could be conclusively demonstrated that such an odor proceeded from such and such a cause, as we already know of sulphur, sulphuretted hydrogen, ammonia, and the like.

But since then cultivation has made Europe the rival of Asia in its roses. The rose gardens of France are celebrated. Acres of roses bloom in them for the perfumer. The heliotrope, eugenotile and other floral plants are found side by side with them in dense masses. The air is heavy with almost sickening fragrance, and for miles around the breezes bear the sweet tidings that they have "blown over the gardens of Gaul in their bloom." Within thirty miles of London lavender fields have become quite an extensive and recognised industry, and there is annually produced, in England alone, sufficient oil from the plant to manufacture 30,000 gallons of spirits of lavender, beside a large quantity, the oil of which is unknown, to be used in the production of other perfumes with

THE SAN FRANCISCO EXCITEMENT.

The bitter political and personal warfare being waged over the local canvass in San Francisco culminated, on the 23d in the attempted killing of the Workingmen's candidate for Mayor—Rev. I. S. Kalloch—by Charles De Young, one of the proprietors and editors of the Chronicle of that city. One account of the affair is as follows, given in a dispatch from San Francisco:

About one o'clock Charles De Young drove to Metropolitan Temple in a coupe. At the time Kalloch was about stepping into a car, Rev. Dr. Gard Browne, De Young sent an American District messenger boy to him to say a gentleman wanted to speak with him. As Kalloch approached the coupe De Young fired, hitting him in the left breast just above the heart. Kalloch staggered and turned to escape. De Young fired another shot, which hit him in the thigh. It could appear that trouble had been anticipated, as police were on duty at the meeting in the vicinity of the temple. They at once made a rush for the coupe, and quickly seized the horses. Kalloch fell to the ground. He kept them at bay for a moment with a revolver, receiving no other arrived on the scene. The crowd seized the coupe and overturned it. As it went over De Young got out. He and the officer were at once attacked, the officer was knocked down and trampled on, and De Young beaten about the head and body. He was very much excited. The officer, De Young and the driver of the coupe were taken into the police court. Judge Hung him." "Kill him!" At the corner of Fifth and Market streets a large crowd had gathered, and when they met Kalloch's carriage they attempted to stop it, but the police rapidly dispersed the crowd, and escorted the prisoners to the police station. Meanwhile the police rapidly assembled. Heavy reserves were stretched across the streets leading to the prison, and every preparation made to resist an attack. The Chief of Police at once called General Morgan in consultation, and Attorney General Hamilton, who was present, telegraphed to Governor Irwin for troops. No answer has yet been received, as the Governor's exact whereabouts are not known. Several hours passed in anxiety and responsibility, and ordered the military to assemble at their armories, before they felt overwhelmingly secure.

News of the tragedy spread like wildfire through the city, and the streets were soon crowded with excited throngs. Strong guards were placed around the Chronicle building and printing offices to prevent their being sacked. It will be remembered that the Chronicle office at the time of the shooting, at once sought the City Prison, and in a few minutes came with Charles. For some time it was uncertain what had been done to the wounded man, and Kalloch was first removed to Fort Alcatraz for greater safety, but was afterward brought back to the city. Meanwhile a committee of workingmen, headed by Clitus Barbier, had called upon Kalloch, and they were allowed to select twelve men, who were sworn in as special officers to protect the prisoner. Kalloch had advertised a mass meeting at Metropolitan Temple last night, at which he was to speak with a view to a more public refutation of some few cases ago by B. F. Napthaly, in a public paper against De Young. The attack was at once upon the personal and family record of the latter. Younger of the most prominent of the Vigilance Committee of 1856, and led to an attempt on their part to kill Napthaly, which failed. The Rev. Dr. Gard Browne was the man that if he read these scenes they would shoot him on sight. Last night an immense audience gathered at Metropolitan Temple, and the street outside was packed with a vast crowd, seeing thousands. Kalloch addressed the meeting, alluding to De Young's personal record and attacking on their personal record and family antecedents in the most direct manner. After adjourning the meeting in the hall he went outside, mounted a stand and spoke briefly. After receiving the keys of the Chronicle upon himself, he said: "In assigning the reputation of my father, I have raised an honorable grave for many years. Base journalistic vipers have rendered the most infamous assistance on my part necessary and justifiable. These slanders I have met over De Young got out. He and the officer were at once attacked, the officer was knocked down and trampled on, and De Young beaten about the head and body. He was very much excited. The officer, De Young and the driver of the coupe were taken into the police court before Judge Hung him." "Kill him!" These slanders I have met over [illegible] such an attack possible" he then applied the most disgusting epithets to the De Young family, reflecting critically upon the character of their mother. He said he had the same intention to publish the life of Isaac de Young, but he did not wish to expose all his associations at once. I would be published immediately in full in the Workingmen's paper, the Open Letter. Kalloch then said he would take it up and comment upon it.

Charles de Young evidently considered the proceedings of the evening equal provocation to the actual reading of the article, and acted accordingly.

A Mile a Minute.

"How fast do you think we are travelling?" Charley Fraser, one of the oldest engineers of the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railway, asked a Sun reporter, as they were standing together on the footboard of a locomotive 900, rushing over the meadows toward Rutherford Park.

"I should think we were going nearly a mile a minute."

"A mile a minute!" said Fraser. "I doubt if you ever rode a mile a minute. Few locomotives have driving-wheels over five feet, and I have no doubts is a five-foot wheeler can be pushed a mile a minute. People have a very erroneous idea of the speed of railroad trains. We are not going now more that thirty-five miles an hour, and this is very fast. Few trains make this speed. The passengers in the cars would think we were going a mile a minute if I was to pull out the throttle so as to send her forty miles an hour. The express trains make no such time as the local trains. Where we lose is with as many as we have. No man could stand on a platform car and face the wind going a mile a minute paralize. This interested means a distance of 92,000,000 miles as the distance of the sun from the earth.

—Gerrald tells of a man who, being bitten by a cat which died of hydrophobia, was attacked by symptoms of the disease, and he cured himself by taking violent physical exercise in the open air, although he suffered greatly. His physician says he was cured by a violent effort of the will.

—Professor Richardson considers absinthe drinking worse than opium eating. In the worst examples, the absinthe drinker becomes a confirmed epileptic. One or two wine-glassfuls of it a day will produce permanent dyspepsia. A more concentrated devil of destruction could not be concocted."

—A recent case is quoted showing that quinine is not given pure by druggists. A physician prescribed a strong dose of quinine for a patient suffering from a violent attack of fever. The second attack was worse than the first, and the doctor, doubting the druggist, made an analysis, and found the suspected quinine was mostly adulterated with salicine.

—Beans are good for food in every situation, especially at sea, because the seeds contain the very principles contained in them are in a more or less soluble condition. If beans are hard, dry and incapable of germinating, their phosphates will need to be rendered soluble by citric acid or some other available agent, otherwise the system will not be sufficiently supplied with nutriment.—Exchange.

—A calculation by Mr. Andrew Wilson in regard to the amount of work performed by bees in collecting honey results as follows: He finds that 125 heads of clover yield approximately one gram of sugar (about fifteen and one-half grains), and that 125,000 heads yield one kilogram (2.2 pounds). Now, as each head of clover contains about sixty florets, it follows that the bees must suck 7,500,000 distinct florets in order to obtain two and one-fifth pounds of sugar. And as honey may be said to contain roughly seventy-five per cent. of sugar, we have one kilogram equivalent to 5,000,000 flowers, or say 2,000,000 visits for one pound of honey.

—The busy bee on Long Island has utilized a novel receptacle for his honeyed product. The establishment of the Van Brunt family stands in the town of New Utrecht. For two hundred and twenty years it has weathered the storms which have beaten upon the Dutch mansion. Recently repairs were needed, and workmen in tearing off the shingles which covered it in lieu of cisplanella, found their progress opposed by an immense swarm of honey bees, which dwelt between the outer and inner walls. The destruction of their hive. By aid of sulphur the bees at length were overcome and forty pounds of honey were captured.

—Dr. Moesta, a geologist, while searching in the vicinity of Rotenburgh, on the Fulda, discovered a subterranean lake at a depth of eight feet under the ground. The number of well-preserved trunks is enormous. The wood is as black as ebony, and in consequence of the influence of water for centuries; but it is hard and sound, and forms an excellent material for wood-carving and inlaid. The size of the trunks is astonishing. One of them about eighteen meters or 720 inches in length and 10 meters or sixty inches in breadth, has been preserved for exhibition in the Royal Museum at Berlin. The forest evidently belongs to a very remote period in the formation of the globe.

The British Medical Journal remarks that during the last three the Kalmucks have had epidemic at Veljanka, Russia, not a single case occurred among the Kalmucks, who lived not very far from that place. The fact is surprising, as the Kalmucks live totally regardless of sanitary rules. Their religion does not permit them to eat flesh except that of animals which are found dead; they do not bury the bodies of persons who die, but simply throw them into the steppes; and in person they are far from being scrupulously clean. The conclusion seems to be that antihygienic conditions alone do not produce the plague, and that there is some other agent to which this disease is readily due.

Singing is one of the healthiest exercises in which women and children can engage. The Instituto Geografico de Agostini, of Novara, in an article based upon exhaustive researches made by Professor Monasein during the autumn of 1878, when he examined two hundred and twenty-five singers ranging between the ages of nine and fifty-three. He laid chief weight upon the growth and absolute circumference of the chest, upon the comparative relation of the latter to the tallness of the subject, and upon the pneumatometric and spirometric condition of the singer. It appears to be an ascertained fact from Dr. Monasein's experiments that the relative, and even the absolute, circumference of chest is greater among singers than among those who do not sing, and that it increases with the growth and age of the singer. The professor seems to that singing may be placed physically as the antithesis of drinking spirituous liquors. The latter hinders, while the former promotes.

—French chicken-producers find that feeding the fowls with boiled or steamed carrots, chopped into small pieces, rapidly fattens them and imparts an agreeable flavor to the flesh, greatly relished by epicures, and that fowls thus fed sell more rapidly than others.

—To Purify Cistern Water.—But suppose, says George Geddes, in the New York Tribune, the water has become offensive, and it cannot be spared, how can it be made fit to use? A bushel of hard-wood ashes, suspended in a sack in a cistern of 100 barrels capacity, has accomplished this end in my case to my satisfaction in two cases that have come under his observation.

—An Indiana farmer says: "Last year was a very bad one to get cabbages to head, the cabbage worm was so bad. Below I give a remedy that is sure death to them. For every hundred heads of cabbage take a quarter of a pound of black pepper and put it in a box large enough to sift out well. Go into the patch before the dew is off and pepper them well. Two or three times will be sufficient. The worms go crawling and are killed."

—The Nebraska Farmer says: "But few men are aware of the fact that hay is very beneficial for hogs, but it is true nevertheless. Hogs need more or less rough food as well as horses, cattle, or the human race. To prepare it you should have a cutting box (or hay cutter), and the greener the hay the better. Cut the hay as short as oats, or shorter, and mix with bran, shorts or middlings, and feed as other food. Hogs soon learn to like it, and if salted a little in swill, as other slop food, it is highly relished by them. In winter and fall the hogs the same hay you feed to your horses and you will find that, while it saves grain, shorts or other food, it puts on flesh as rapidly as anything that can be given them. The use of hay can be commenced at early dates, and will do to cut, and when run through the cutting-box it can be used to advantage by simply soaking in fresh water until it soaks soft."

—Those who wish to cultivate families in their window next winter should start it now. Separate the bulbs, allowing but two or three to a pot. Use loam, leaf mould and sand in equal quantities for potting with a little pure bone dust thoroughly among it. Place the pots where they may have a fair heat, and not much sun, and keep the soil just moist. When the plants appear above ground remove to a window where they may get the morning and evening sun and keep the pots moist, but not drenched with water. Smilax likes plenty of heat but not a hot sun. Many persons make a mistake in attempting to train the vines to trellises. They should simply be given a small twine to cling to. Thus they will make a nice growth, and besides being very pretty are in such abundance for cutting during winter. In cutting sever the plant at the point wanted and pull the whole vine from the string. The bottom will again grow and form a new vine. If wanted for permanent show, the strings may be carried around any object, and their pecular growth will produce a very nice effect.—Prairie Farmer.

Water for Cows.

While it is a most villainous practice to put even pure water in the milk can, it is equally reprehensible to put impure water in the cow. She is, however, a hot machine, and need a large quantity of cool water to keep her in good condition. Besides, milk itself is composed of more than eighty per cent. water. That is, the cow puts that much in it.

The question of how best to water cows is an important one. Ponds are objectionable for several reasons. They are hotbeds, so to speak, for all kinds of creeping and swimming slimy things that filthy water cows will drink when they are hot and thirsty. The only way to prevent their doing it is to have pure water always at hand. Do not flatter yourself that she will walk very far to get it, either. If anything disagreeable is close at hand.

There is no way that water can be more profitably fed to a cow than to mix it with her food. What is called "slopping" is a bit of prime value in milk production. Nothing about the dairy pays better than the labor required for mixing up a cow's feed for her, and the more water you get into her this way the better.—American Dairyman.

A Hint to Workingmen.

The hard times weigh upon many of the country, many of whom have large and increasing families to support, have been terribly afflicted from the great disease of pressure under which we have labored for the last few years. It is a fact that we have not been attended by a corresponding diminution in price of everything which the workingman needs. Rent, food, fuel and clothing are cheaper, but these are not necessary to the comforts of life. It is the luxuries necessary for men to employ a lawyer or a physician, yet the fee rate of physicians and lawyers are as high as they were in "flush" times. Yet cheap medicines are not necessary. All the cheap kinds of medicines are not necessarily poor medicines. It must be remembered that to every intelligent person that medicines, compounded and put up at wholesale, are just as good as those put up and then retailed from the doctor's gilt bags. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the most celebrated remedies who has ever sold thousands of bottles to the people, and is highly recommended by physicians, druggists, and all at a very slight expenditure.

The reason why medical practitioners do not hesitate to prescribe Dr. P. Wilhelm's Anti-Fever and Ague Tonic is given as follows: Messrs. Wheelock, Finley & Co., of New Orleans, its proprietors, have published the formula of their medicine and physicians have pronounced it the best combination of the kind ever made. Consequently it readily proves successful. It is for sale by all Druggists.

All who have used National Yeast say it makes whiter, sweeter and better bread, biscuits, etc., than any other yeast. Try it.

Hydrox Work.—The dredge Leslie down early last week, and has suspended operations until the arrival of material to repair. Another dredge is expected soon, when the one will go to Portage to commence work on the harbor there. The three cuts will be sunk this week, weather permitting.

The Fox-Rose-Buttars question has settled down to about this: If the people of the region promptly open the upper river, work will be commenced on the furnaces; if not, another site will be chosen on the east shore of the Wisconsin, where many iron deposits have been told out. Now the amount necessary to open this condition and here will not exceed $1,000 or $1,200, an amount which, when compared to the interests involved, is inconsiderable, after as a mess of pottage in the purchase of a birthright. It is about time for people of the section to wake up. The people are anxious to have such a branch if they allow the railroad to go by entirely. There are in Charlevoix county between the Pine Lake and the outbound will receive heavy loads from the outside, and all these would at the point proposed, and if it only a matter of five miles and would receive for them to about in the county station. We call upon the people at the two heads to start the matter in their localities at once, and upon the result as Hon. John Nicholls, of the place.

That Mail Contract.—The Sheriff of Emmet county and Mr. McCarty went to Elk Rapids last week and secured the person of Andrew Cunningham, the weary-ward mail carrier, and the property which he disposed of and brought them to this place, en route to Emmet county. On Thursday evening while the Sheriff and McCarty were indulging in a game of billiard like Brahmins, Cunningham "skipped," and has not been seen since. Probably no effort will be made to find him.

Lecture.—Carswell at Boyne Falls.

Teachers attending the Teachers' Institute at Charlevoix, commencing next Monday, will be entertained free, on application to P. W. Mayne, local committee. This is a generous proposition, and we hope that the teachers of Emmet county will embrace the opportunity to visit Charlevoix. Let us send Emmet county teachers can not invest no better to time to attend at Charlevoix, than Charlevoix did at the Institute here last summer. If not, we can forever after hold our peace about the jealousy of our neighbor.—Record.

California and Maine.

The returns from these two States indicate great victories for the Republicans. In the former State Republican results were achieved. The Republican plurality is 25,000, and perhaps 25,000. Last spring the "Workingmen" ratified their communistic constitution by a majority of over 14,000. In 1876 the Republican majority was less than 3,000. The gain over 1878 is 29,000 and over last spring's election nearly 35,000. In addition to the entire State ticket, the Republicans elect all four Congressmen, thus insuring the State to that party in event of the presidential election being thrown into the House. The Democratic party is wiped out in the State and Kearneyism has received its death blow. Maine reiterates her say by a glorious republican victory. The majority for the Governor has will reach 20,000, and even the Democratic 10,000. These figures will be increased, rather than reduced, by the full returns. It requires a majority of the whole vote to elect, failing which the House of Representatives send to the Senate the names of two of those voted for and the Senate chooses a Governor. Last year, the Democrats and Greenbackers having a majority in the House, sent their own candidates to the Senate, and Garcelon was chosen. This year the Republicans will have both the Senate and House, and so will elect their own man. Davis, even should he fail to receive the requisite majority of all the votes cast. The State is therefore safely Republican. These victories clearly indicate that the political tide is setting toward a general Republican result. Ohio will soon follow in the track of California and Maine.

Sudden Departure of Mrs. Sprague from Her Home.

New York Sun, 1.

A special from Narragansett Pier says:

"The secret is out that has reigned in the Sprague mansion at Canonchet since the sudden departure of Mrs. Sprague and her children and the hushing up of the scandal was broken in upon yesterday afternoon by the sudden departure of that lady, accompanied by her three little daughters. The sun ceases to remain with his father. That step not only revives the scandal, but presents some new phases of it, and freshly kindles public interest as to what the outcome of the whole matter will be. Mrs. Sprague went away, it is understood, without her husband's consent, and despite not only his, but, as it would seem, other and more potent opposition. It was stated soon after the unhappy lady's return to her home that she was unrestrictedly placed under espionage. Though this was denied by various friends of the persons most interested, the effect has been general here that the statement was true, and that the surveillance was maintained up to the time of Mrs. Sprague's departure. It is claimed that ex-Governor Sprague has himself taken charge of letters and telegrams that came for his wife, that in all recited the servants to refuse admittance to such as Mrs. Sprague's friends as he did not desire her to see, and forbade the domestics to obey their mistress' orders."

A Sun special from Narragansett says:

"People at the Pier are in excitement over the escape from Canonchet of Mrs. Sprague last night. Mrs. Sprague claims that ever since she returned to Canonchet with her children she has been subjected to many annoyances by the Governor, which culminated on Saturday in an actual outburst on his part. Her friends say the Governor, coming home Friday morning intoxicated, suddenly went into the room where the nurses were dressing the children and, seizing Mrs. Sprague there, said: 'I'll show you who is master here;' and, without further words, took hold of her arm and shoulder, dragged her around the room, and attempted to throw her out of the window, saying before witnesses that he would do so. He was prevented from carrying his threat into execution by those present. The children were half-dressed, and screaming with fright. Mrs. Sprague began quickly to make preparation to leave, and, Saturday afternoon, about 5:30, quietly took her departure, accompanied by her three children, their nurses and luggage. So well were her plans arranged that the Governor and his nephew, Arthur Watson, who were keeping watch upon her movements, knew nothing about her departure until the party had a good hour's start and were many miles away. Mr. Watson, upon finding them gone, immediately started down town, and drove to the depot and the hotels in hopes of finding some clue to their whereabouts. Finding none, he turned back, and when half way between the depot and the old place he met ex-Governor, who had started at a break-neck speed for Kingston Junction, about eight miles away.

"Leaving the Pier at about the same time as the train for Kingston, he spurred his horse to race-course speed, and then began a race between the Governor and the train, he hoping to cut them off if they had got on board at any out-of-the-way place along the line of that road. When Conductor Hale's train arrived at Kingston the Governor was standing on the platform, with wind-bedraggled coat, and excited face, watching for signs of the unsuspecting party. He accosted Conductor Hale with: 'Have you lugged off my children?' Hale told him he had seen nothing of them, and, after looking through the train and inquiring of officials at Kingston depot, the Governor started back for the Pier as was supposed, as all traces of his movements were lost from that point.

"There are many theories as to the manner in which Mrs. Sprague managed the affair so adroitly. It seemed improbable she could have taken the cars, for no train left the Pier between 5:30 and 7:30 o'clock, and her departure was discovered between those hours. Her son Willie was at the depot keeping watch in all the interval between the time of discovery and the departure of the last train. The general impression is that Mrs. Sprague left in a steam yacht, and that, too, from the pier of the Newport boat. A strange, loafing ne'er-do-well sailor was also seen hovering about the Pier all the afternoon, and suddenly went up to the Newport boat-dock, and, after waiting about ten minutes, steamed tentatively away, perhaps with Mrs. Sprague on board.

"Governor Sprague will undoubtedly exhaust every means to discover the whereabouts of the children, and will certainly use every legal effort to recover them. A suit for separation, brought by either husband or wife, will probably at once be instituted to settle the right to the control of the children."

New York, September 2.

A Times special from Narragansett Pier says:

"Regarding his wife's departure, Mr. Sprague is credited with saying: 'Mrs. Sprague certainly did not come or go in consequence of any threat or act of violence on my part. When she went to Providence, early in August, she went without clashing for the little girls. I thought of it, but waited until I heard from her authoritatively, before I acted. Word came that she was at Conductor Hale's house with the children. I immediately went there and claimed the children, and Mrs. Sprague followed them on Saturday. I knew they had intended to get away on Friday night, and went to the nursery door and turned the knob, intending to tell the nurse there must be none of last night's preparations. On turning the knob, Mrs. Sprague called out, 'You may not come in here.' No act of violence was committed by me then or at any other time.'

"Mr. Sprague is reported to have said that Mrs. Sprague's movements were directed by some one not in the family, as none of the family knew of what she intended to do or where she designed going.

"Mr. Sprague this afternoon received a letter from Mrs. Sprague's counsel, which leaves no doubt on his mind that the counsel are fully informed of her whereabouts. They have declined to tell where Mrs. Sprague is, but offered to send any luggage to her that Mr. Sprague will permit removed from Canonchet. The circumstances point to a separation, and it is confidently believed that Mrs. Sprague had contemplated this action looking to a separation before she left Canonchet. On this subject Mr. Sprague has expressed himself that he did not believe Mrs. Sprague would seek a divorce, but her efforts would be directed to obtaining something short of that—a limited divorce with possession of the girls. Such effort Mr. Sprague will resist with all his strength and means. As the case stands it seems it will inevitably come before the public in one of the courts. It is probable that if it does the part Senator Conkling has played in creating the unpleasant state of affairs will be set forth fully, fairly and without interference.

—The very idea of the word "taste" in art criticism is a clear recognition of the analogy between esthetic perception and the sensations of the palate. * * * The plain truth is that in music, painting and poetry, even of the most elevated kind, the essentially artistic qualities (as distinguished from the moral and intellectual) have their exact counterparts in eating and drinking.—London Portfolio.

—Professor Brun, of Geneva, has described a curious case of poisoning in a child of two years of age. It was caused by eating a combination of cabbage and figs. The cabbage, he says, must have produced a great abundance of lactic acid, which, in the presence of figs, developed enough of butyric acid to cause the death of the child.

A CONCEIT.

I've seen a lazy cloud in olden tales
Such as the Persian poets sing,
That by the Eastern Easter tales
Are thus with but a single wing.

And books and links of word bound
Be said of sinking wings aright;
And thus, when either love alone
Leaves human boundless space to fly,

Each lacks its other better part,
Which owing by its mate supplied,
They, linked together, hard to beat,
With hopeful wings can upward glide.

Each bird, depending on its mate,
Their birds the use need of acting care,
Each leans to part the other's weight,
And thus is formed a perfect pair.

And so, I've thought the human heart
Will ailent in its pinion dwell,
And happiness in the contentment
Is brought within its noble spell.

Like those rare birds of Destiny depicted
It strives in vain to leave the earth,
Until we Fate appointed find
Its kindred wing to mate with.

And then bound fast with bonds of love
Self-lading for time knows it long,
The beam can soar to realms above
Two souls in honor love for one.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

The Boston Methodist churches have an aggregate indebtedness of about $293,000.

—Owing to the falling off of legacies, the receipts of the Home Missionary Society were $40,000 less last year than the year previous, but the gifts of living contributors were $7,000 larger.

—Unlike his predecessor, Archbishop Bayley, the present Archbishop of Baltimore, is opposed to the simple Gregorian music. Modern music will in future be sung in the Cathedral of that city.

—In Mexico the Methodists have thirty-four missionaries in all, including converts, helpers, assistants and lay preachers, and report a total membership of 3,440. The Presbyterians have twenty-seven churches, and a total membership of 3,280.

—The revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament have recently held their ninety-first session. It is expected that the entire revision will be completed within a year, and that publication will speedily follow.

—The Quakers in Western Pennsylvania are much exercised over the militinery question. Some of the sisters will persist in wearing the ungodly hats glorified in the fashion-books, and for so doing several have been excommunicated.

—The Methodist thinks that churches are too easily taken with shining qualities in ministers. "If a man of unusually brilliant is available as a teacher or preacher, his brilliancy is often accepted as presumptive evidence that he is a holy man."

—A Chinese boy belonging to one of the Mission schools at Peking, China, at a recent examination, repeated the entire New Testament without missing a single word or making a single mistake. He is now beginning to memorize Dr. Martin's "Evidences of Christianity."

—Professor Swing does not believe in two services on Sunday. A minister, he thinks, cannot produce two good sermons or Sunday. "An intellectual man," he says, "dare not quit producing and creating and reshaping. He dare not make much use of his old manuscripts; but nothing makes a man more guiltless-fowl of himself and gubble intensantly."

—Sir Bartle Frere is authority for the statement that the inhabitants of a remote village in Deccan have abjured idolatry and caste, removed their idols from the temples, and professed a Christianity which they learned for themselves from earnest reading of a single Gospel and a few tracts left among them by a merchant, who made no attempt to instruct them.

—Statistics show a remarkable growth of Roman Catholicism in New England during the last thirty years. There are now connected with this church 6 dioceses, 1 Archbishop, 5 Bishops, 696 priests, 520 churches, 31 chapels, 2 colleges, 30 academies, 157 parochial schools, containing 25,000 pupils; 19 asylums, 7 hospitals, and a Catholic population of 861,000. The growth in thirty years is 4 dioceses, 4 Bishops, 624 priests, 525 churches and chapels, 26 academies, 107 parochial schools, 23 asylums and 761,000 Catholic population.

The Influence of the Fall-Season Upon the Health of Live-Stock.

Fall weather is more or less changeable, and, in many respects, somewhat similar to that of spring. The temperature especially changes, and is much lower than in summer; the nights are getting cold, and the humidity of the atmosphere increases. With the exception of a certain part of fall—the so-called Indian summer—the weather, as a rule, is rough and changeable, and storms are frequent. The vegetation, and especially the food-plants and grasses of field and pasture, which have become dry and juiceless during the summer, will partially recover and become juicy and nutritious again—to a certain extent at least—if the weather is mild and favorable, but will wither still more and be made destitute of nutritious elements if night-frosts make their appearance early in the season, as is very often the case. As to the animals themselves, a change, too, is taking place—at least in so far as the functions of the skin are concerned. The activity, or rather productiveness, of the latter increases, because the coat of hair grows denser and longer; the animals obtain their winter dress.

The influence of the fall, or of the conditions brought about by the fall season, is in many respects a wholesome one. In the first place, the lower temperature retards more or less all processes of decomposition, and is also less favorable to the development and propagation of all lower forms of organic life than the comparatively high temperature of the summer. As a consequence, accumulated animals are less tormented by insects; and all those, usually very dangerous, infections and epizootic diseases which owe their existence to, or with are caused by, those minute organic bodies—microcci, bacilli, etc.—classified in modern times as parasites, become less frequent, and almost entirely cease to spread as soon as it commences to freeze, because from interfere with the development and propagation of these disease-germs. Hence, if the weather is mild and steady, the fall season of the year is rather conducive to good health than otherwise. If, however, the weather becomes boisterous, stormy and changeable, catarrhal and rheumatic diseases become frequent, the same as in the spring, and are then, as a rule, more serious than in the former season, because in the spring the temperature rises, and weather and food improve almost from day to day, and the cold nights are getting shorter and the days longer; while in the fall just the reverse is taking place. Further, the grass and herbage of field and pasture are frequently very poor, and almost destitute of soluble and nutritious substances, the animals, in consequence, have to suffer for want of suitable and sufficiently nutritious food, and are, therefore, often in a poor and emaciated condition by the cold weather sets in, or at a time when a good condition as to flesh is of the utmost importance. Such is the case especially if the summer has been hot and dry, and if the weather commences to rain in the fall to become stormy, cold and stormy. If both summer and fall are wet, and therefore favorable to the development of enzoons (worm) brood, worm-diseases—some of them very dangerous—will be frequent, particularly in young animals and in sheep, as the latter are enormous as are naturally low and wet, or abounding in sloughs and swamps, in the early fall. Such pastures abound in insufficient animals are concerned, also a bad spring, because the latter is followed by warmer weather and a season of plenty, and the former by cold weather and a season in which field and pasture are destitute or almost destitute of any food whatever.

Still, most of the calamities brought about by a bad fall can be counteracted by judicious treatment. In the first place, every owner of live-stock in our latitude at least—must take care to have his animals in good condition as to flesh when winter, or the cold season of the year, is approaching. If the food offered by field and pasture is poor, insufficient or insufficient, it is necessary—or rather necessary—to feed some dry food—grain or hay, as the case may be—every morning, especially if the weather, at the same time, has become cold, inclement and stormy. Bad and cold weather affects an animal comparatively little if the latter has the stomach well filled with good and nutritious food, because in that case the animal's organism is provided with material for producing animal heat without being obliged to consume its own tissues. On the other hand the effect of cold and inclement weather is a very injurious one, productive of disease and emaciation, if the animal is in a poor condition, or has an empty stomach, because in that case the organism, in order to maintain the necessary degree of heat, has to consume its own tissues. It is always economical to feed well in the fall, and to give every head of live stock sufficient shelter and protection in a stable, or shed, etc., at least at night-time, as soon as the weather becomes cold and stormy. One bushel of grain fed in the fall is often more valuable than ten bushels fed in the winter.—"Veterinarian." in Chicago Tribune.

A Smart Wife.

The other morning a citizen called at a hardware store on Woodward avenue and said he wanted a key to a certain door in his house, and he took up and carried away almost the first key handed out to him. On his way down town after dinner he stopped and exchanged the key for another, explaining that the first wouldn't fit. These changes took place twice a day for the next four days, the citizen being unable to get hold of a key to fit. On the sixth day he drove up to the store with a four on a dray, and calling to the proprietor he said:

"Bring your box of keys out here and we'll get a fit to that look. Here I have been running back and forth for about a week, and I might not have got a fit for a whole month if my wife had not suggested that I bring the door down here. Some of these women are mighty smart."

"But why didn't you take the lock off and bring it down in your pocket?" asked the dealer.

The buyer looked at him in a vacant way, stared hard at the door, and sat down on the curbstone with the remark:

"It's a wonder that the whole family wasn't sent to the foul-house ten years ago!"—Detroit Free Press.

Just think of the polar bear. He roams around all day seeking the sunny side of an iceberg, and at night rests his weary head on a pillow of frozen snow. He needs no fan by day or mosquito netting by night. Neither does he have to take his best girl out and treat her to soda water and ice-cream.—New Haven Register.

A SUCCESSFUL VOYAGE.

Arrival of the Steamer Vega at Yokohama—Professor Nordenskjöld's Account of His Arctic Experiences—The Northeast Passage Made for the First Time.

New York, September 3.

A special from Yokohama says:

The Swedish exploring steamer Vega, belonging to the Nordenskjold expedition, arrived at this port last evening, having successfully accomplished the Northeast passage. The health of the entire ship's company is excellent. I have just seen Professor Nordenskjold, who says that during the latter part of February he sent a letter to Dr. O. Dickson, of Gothenburg, from the winter quarters of the Vega, but he has no intimation that his patron has received it. The Professor says:

"We sailed from Gottenburg on July 4, 1878, and four days' sail brought us to Tromsoe (a Norwegian port on an island of the same name), where our outfit of furs and necessaries for the high latitudes was completed by the contributions of the companion steamer, the Lena.

"On July 25 both vessels sailed from Tromsoe, and through the Yugor Strait (south of Nova Zembla) August 5. There was not a particle of ice to be seen between Waigatsch Island, a Russian island, and the continent. The Kara Sea, hitherto dreaded by all sailors in the Arctic regions, and especially the Siberian ice, and anchor was cast at Port Dixon, near the mouth of the Yenisei, on August 8.

"After a three day's delay there, the two steamers of our expedition steered northeast toward the dreaded Taimur-land and North Cape. Here we crossed our passage and we were compelled to remain at Taboy (Cape Taimur) four days. On August 19, Tsoyhin, the extreme northern point of Asia was reached, where a short rest was taken. The Vega coasted the peninsula, very near the being encountered, and anchored at the mouth of the Lena River on August 26. to the north-eastward of the land of Liakhov Islands, which we soon sighted, but were not able to explore because of the great fields of ice that girt their shores. The mouth of the Kolyma River (lat. 69 deg., 30 min.; long. 161 deg., 30 min.), a broad estuary, was found open, and we hastened to make all possible progress eastward.

"Our difficulties soon began, however, and increased daily. We were delayed much by the ice between Cape Cook and Vankarema. We crossed Kalinitzkie Bay on Sept. 27 with considerable ease, but were unchained on the 29th near a Tshutzki settlement (lat. 67 deg. 7 min north; long. 177 deg. 21 min. west).

"We wintered in the pack ice at this point, one mile from land. The entire ship's company maintained the best of health and spirits. Not a single case of scurvy occurred on board. During the shortest day the sun was above the horizon but four hours, and then only the upper limb was visible. At this point much time was devoted to hunting scientific and ethnographic studies.

"There were four thousand inhabitants in the several villages near by, but we had no trouble in keeping them friendly. They are called the Tchuctchi, and are a very agreeable class of people. During spring, when the ice began to break up, we made preparations for an exploring party to river. They supplied the expedition with bear and reindeer meat. The ice was extensive, averaging 36 centigrades (32.2 degrees below Fahrenheit). The game was abundant in the spring, wild fowl being taken in large numbers. We were detained in the ice at this point 264 days, but were released on July 18, and passed East Cape into Behring Strait on the 20th. Such is the story of our voyage."

"I fully accomplished the object for which the expedition was sent out by Dr. Dickson, namely, a practical proof of the existence of a Northeast passage. Then the Asiatic coast was followed, and St. Lawrence Bay was crossed to Port Clarence, Alaska. Hence we crossed to Koniyan, dredging carefully in order to determine the formation of the bottom of the sea, many specimens of the fauna and flora being obtained. The location, breadth, velocity and approximate volume of the currents of the Arctic and Pacific polar currents were charted and calculated. Having touched at St. Lawrence Island, we next proceeded to Behring Island, where we received the first news from Europe through the Resident Agent of the Alaska Trading Company.

"The fossil remains on Behring Island are of immense variety. A new species of animal was here discovered, which we named Rhytina Stellari. The Vega left the island on August 19, and had a pleasant voyage until August 31, when a severe gale was encountered, accompanied with lightning. During the storm, the lightning struck and shivered the mainmast, slightly injuring several men. We arrived off Yokohama at half-past eight on the evening of September 2. All are well, and no deaths have occurred during the voyage.

"The Vega in the first vessel to make the passage, and I think the voyage from Europe to Asia by Behring Straits is certain and safe, with very little more experience of navigation in the Northern Seas. From Japan to the mouth of the Lena River there are no difficulties in the proper season for extensive whaling. The Lena River steamships Central Siberia, and a large prospective trade can be readily developed. The Vega will remain at Yokohama about fourteen days."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

To remove rust from steel the steel should be washed with a solution composed of one-half ounce cyanide of potassium in two ounces of water; then brush with the following recipe: Cyanide of potassium, one-half ounce; castile soap, one ounce; whiting and water sufficient to form a paste. Cyanide of potassium is a most violent poison, and persons using it should be particularly careful.—Scientific American.

—As soon as potatoes are dug store them in some barn or outhouse until just before freezing weather, when they must be removed to a dry and sufficiently warm cellar. A building latticed like a cornerib is best for potatoes until frost comes, as they require to be placed where there is a full circulation of air. After clear removal to the cellar place them in bins made of slats, leaving from five to ten inches each.—N. Y. Herald.

—We venture the assertion that the man who takes sufficient care of his stock from the beginning of winter to the market, providing for their proper and necessary feed and shelter in the varying seasons to keep them always growing, healthy and thrifty, will find his profits to be twenty-five to fifty per cent. greater than those of his neighbor on similar stock who does not, and ordinary care given by the average farmer.—Iowa State Register.

—A husband complained that his child learned to talk before it was a year old, and the case was referred to a knowing shirt-maker, and his answer is well worth the attention of housekeepers: "Yes," said the man, "the fault is with your laundress. While doing up your collars she stretches them the wrong way. Damp linen is very pliable, and a good pull will alter a fourteen-inch to a fifteen collar in the twinkling of an eye. She ought to stretch them crosswise and not lengthwise. Then in straightening out your shirt bosom she makes another mistake of the same sort. They also ought to be pulled crosswise instead of lengthwise, particularly in the neighborhood of the neck. A lengthwise pull draws the front of the neckband somewhat directly under your chin, where it was never meant to go, and the result upsets the set of your collar. With the front of your neckband an inch too high, and your collar an inch too low, you have a most undesirable combination."

—Melons may be fattened in the following manner: Before the melon has attained its full size, and while in a growing condition, insert one end of a strip of fine cotton cloth, about half an inch wide and three or four inches long, into the stem of the watermelon, by splitting the stem with a sharp penknife, and place the other end of the strip in the neck of a bottle nearly filled with water, including the bottle so that the water may be supplied to the strip, which acts as a syphon, and making the cloth wet, while in a few days the bottle is little lower than that which is within the bottle. Within twenty-four hours the bottle will be refilled, as the water will all have been imbibed by the melon, and in a week or ten days it will have attained its full size. Then withhold the water to give it a chance to ripen, otherwise it will be quite insipid and unfit to eat. If only one has a patch that is infested to quit farming—and the quicker he quits it the better it will pay him.

It is pitiful to see how men act in these matters. They have not the least faith in honest dealing with the soil. Their effort is to cheat the land—cheat nature—out of a living. They have as little faith in the natural reward of good agriculture as sinners have in the spiritual reward of good moral culture. They fear to trust the soil to return them fair pay for good treatment. They fear that if they should properly manure and properly till a field, they would lose both manure and labor. Ways—not impulses—lack of all to do right, comes from conscious incapacity for the business in which they are engaged. But there is not always an opening. If a man is capable of raising crops, and raising them with profit, will not habitually follow that kind of farming? Would he be to many a young man who has in him the making of a good farmer, but who, buying more land than he can pay for, has all life and ambition and capacity for progress crushed out of him by the burden of an usurious debt. From a freeman with a freeman's spirit he is made a slave, and acquires the stolid thriftlessness of slavery.—Rural New Yorker.

Where the Profit Comes From.

Not many farmers know enough about the details of cost and expenditure in their own business, or bestow upon the subject sufficient study and thought, to know where the profit of farming comes from, or what direction their efforts should take in order to increase that profit. The philosophy of farming is little understood or written upon. Most of us stumble along, working by guess or "rule of thumb," without any clear comprehension of the elements with which we must deal in making the farm pay. far less with any real mastery over the elements.

We set it down as a principle, though few may accept it as such at first, that—unless for a short time upon new soils—a farmer's profits do not come from his land. It is very easy for a man to be "land-poor." That is what ails most farmers at this present time. If it were established as a law that every young farmer should begin with five or ten acres, and be allowed no more land until he had brought that to a high state of profitable productiveness, the whole face of affairs would be changed. Instead of the ruinous, slightly injurious several men. We arrived off Yokohama at half-past eight on the evening of September 2. All are well, and no deaths have occurred during the voyage.

"The Vega in the first vessel to make the passage, and I think the voyage from Europe to Asia by Behring Straits is certain and safe, with very little more experience of navigation in the Northern Seas. The reason why medical compounds do not continue to prevail like D. C. Wilbor's Anti-Pestilence or Fever and Ague Tonic is as clear as day. Wilbor's Blood Balsam and Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil are compounds, the principles of which are established facts in medical science, and hence a cure is effected in cases of Scrofula, Consumption, Chronic Coughs and Colds, and hence it invariably does what is claimed for it. HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Fever and Ague is most common in the spring, but more severe in the fall and winter. It is then a malarious disease, and accessory as the Bitters are adapted, as surely will the individual who adopts this preventive be exempted from its pains and penalties. Add to this the value as a blood-purifier and tonic as well as a safeguard against the effects of impure water, and you will venture to guarantee the claims to be true in almost family medicines.

Since that time until yesterday, the whereabouts of himself and his only sister has been unknown, although for the last nine years persistent search has been made for the children, both in Europe and America, the British Consul-general at New York having been deeply interested in the case. It will be remembered that the children fell, here, nine years ago, by the death of their parents, to a miserable negro woman. In Canton Harry was found in the tramps' lodging-house in this city yesterday, and told a reporter his story, which is that he was kidnapped by a mixed circus performer, who died a short time since. He was brought by him to this country, and, although but five years old, subjected to a Bonfish system of training for the profession of a contortionist. The inhuman trainer began by bending his tender back over his (the trainer's) knees to make it supple, and interrupted his experiments only to fling the poor child for not yielding readily enough. Among other courses to which poor Harry was subjected was standing erect on the showbill, and pulled off.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

THE presence of ammonia in the water of existing seas in general, although its quantity is variable. It exists to a notable extent in gypsum, which, being a sedimentary formation, gives evidence that ammonia was present in the ocean water of the seas of early geological times.

—Dynamite has been used with commonly and successful removing the snags which obstructed navigation in the Waikato River, New Zealand. By means of a pilot wooden tube having a piece of glass in the bottom the part of the snag to be blown for the insertion of the charge was easily sounded. The peculiarity of the action of the explosive has been noted—the stumps were invariably cut off clean at the bottom, and not splintered, leaving a surface as flat as that which would be left by a cross-cut saw.

—A beautiful novelty, recently introduced as to the "fancy" feathers, is that of gilded and silvered feathers. It is chiefly goose feathers and the wings of pigeons that are selected for this curious art, and the process is quite simple. The feather is dipped in bronze powder and rubbed with a piece of cotton wool, in the course of wearing. However, the bronze thus acquired would, necessarily, be very easily detached, but this defect is remedied by dipping the bronze-powder, is taken through gum water, pressed nearly dry through clothes, and in its slightly adhesive state is treated with bronze powder. Partially bronzed feathers and wings are also manufactured by dipping the bronzed parts which are to remain plain with pasteboard, and the bronze powder is rubbed upon the rest with a feather—a feather of the same color as the bronze.

—At the Scientific Convention at Saratoga, the other day, Professor Wilder described a case where a dog removed burs from a cat's tail. The cat and dog were intimate and on the best of terms, and they ate and slept together. The question whether this was an act of benevolence on the part of the dog toward the cat, or whether the dog simply removed burs from his companion because of a nervous irritation about and a dislike of burs. In the process of the removal, to which the cat readily and willingly submitted, one burr stuck fast, and the dog, persisting in its efforts to pull of the burr, pulled the hair on the cat's tail out. Both of them appeared surprised, but the cat did not doubt the kind intent of the operation. The dog then held down the cat's body by means of his foot, and thus proceeding extracted all the burs. Although at first sight it might be thought that the performance were benevolent, Professor Wilder is inclined to view it more as an instance of dislike to burs in general on the part of the dog.

—The relative heat-conducting power of iron and steel boiler plates has recently been tested, in a thorough manner, by means of an apparatus consisting of exactly similar pieces of steel or iron, 11 inches square, 3-8-100 of an inch thick, supported on glass legs, heated by a Bunsen burner consuming equal quantities of gas, maintained at constant pressure of two inches, and a pasib three inches in diameter placed in center of plate, containing mercury in which a delicate thermometer was immersed. The temperature of the mercury was then passed from twenty degrees C. to one hundred and sixty, and relative times noted. The average gain in time of steel over iron plates, of equal thickness, is shown to be thirteen per cent.; and, when the relative thickness of the plates as used in boiler building is taken, this gives an average gain of about twenty per cent. In steam boiler trials, the boilers being similar in all respects, say thickness and material, the actual gain in working twenty days of twelve hours each shows an actual evaporative power of twenty per cent. in favor of the steel.—*N. THE OTHER SIDE.

"The words are good," I said, "I cannot doubt;
I find my answer there as out then out;
But Mary sings an air. Take care, she cries!
"There's a passion on the other side."

I fell to musing. We are too intent
On gaining right—which our minds are bent
We cannot see how the fragments lay and still
Upon the pavement on the other side!

A grain of sadness, always such it be,
That is or has been, will pervade the whole;
We gain our point, and gone and satisfied;
But, as the parties on the other side,

On this we count; I reckon we have,
In that I find a recurring strain in the air
On this a carriage stands with green and gold
A house is making on the other side.

We call it true—accused it roughly down,
The thing which is not; we are wrong, instead of crown;
And we have a thousand reasons, see the gulf,
Where we are—we know not—why those believe.

We pluck a weed, and fling it to the breeze,
A type of hope, and power, and strength we see,
We arrive a crowd with careless smile and jest
And find a figure of despair and terror there.

Dead act are never still as on your go
With eyes wide open in Love's anointing
Life's page will record them it, stained
And I. Reading it, shall be with shame.

MR. BEVEL'S HOBBY.

IT was in a quaint, old-fashioned quarter of London that old Mr. Bevel lived. He had not been long in Mr. Bevel's employ when the quarter was still a more quaint nor the street so shabby, though even then the irresistible refuse of fashion had begun to drift in another direction. But possibly lingered after fashion was past, and when Mr. Bevel installed his bride in her new house, the region was still spoken of as "eminently respectable." Also, nobody called it respectable now. The very fact of residence in it implied an element of ignominy—a fact understood and resented by all the Bevel family except its head. Ever Mrs. Bevel, who, when first transplanted thither from her country surroundings, had looked upon the process of the removal, to which the cat readily and willingly submitted, one burr stuck fast, and the dog, persisting in its efforts to pull of the burr, pulled the hair on the cat's tail out. Both of them appeared surprised, but the cat did not doubt the kind intent of the operation. The dog then held down the cat's body by means of his foot, and thus proceeding extracted all the burs. Although at first sight it might be thought that the performance were benevolent, Professor Wilder is inclined to view it more as an instance of dislike to burs in general on the part of the dog.

pleturesque background for those ancient menbites, but picturesqueness was lost in the younger herein, and only shabbiness was discernible. As they sat there in the early twilight, Matilda groaned for probably the fiftieth time over the wall-paper, multicosal by time into a ridiculous mixture of neutral tint and worse spruce, against which the dull, smoky carvings of Delhi cabinet stood out resplendent, its top crowded with rare jars. The spiteful grayness was simply dirt to Matilda's eyes—dull, common, every-day wear and tear, the original was dainty; the light-backed Venetian chairs on either side ugly and hard to sit on. What she longed for was a smart gilt hanging, stars, perhaps, or polka dots—a polka that was as stylish always and a "suite" of modern walnut and green, such as ruled in her friends' houses. Good-by Rose and nine pounds and ten shillings the eight pieces. She hated old things—painting, carved them—and had eyes for neither grace of form nor charm of color which did not wear the stamp of to-day's brief popularity.

"It is time!" she sighed, as her eye ran over the accustomed objects which to her were such unspeakable grievances. "I'm afraid to see my friends come home, he's so sure to fetch in some ugly thing or other to add to our trials. Aunt Susannah has just got ten hovels last year in Bethnal Green, with the Emperor and Empress on them, and only ten and six a pair—fancy! I wanted some like it, so dreadfully that I borrowed one to show pa, hoping he'd be tempted. But, fancy, he just made such a face, and gave it a push, and said, 'Take it away, my dear, I take it away. It's extraordinary that on one of you has ever learned to know a good thing from a worthless one.' Then when I said they were only ten and six, he shrieked out: 'Ten and six! Then is a farthing! Never let me see this'—and he held up a horrid little black bottle with a bauble—'look at it again. It is three hundred years old, and one of the kings of Spain drank out of it. There's one like it in the British Museum, and one at Naples, so far as I can make out. I know of another thing in the world, and what do you think it cost? Three shillings—absolutely, only three shillings. The greatest did I have had for months . . . . . and sixpence, indeed! Pray carry that trumpery off at once.' . . . . . Now, papa, you know just like pa," observed Maud. "He showed me the bottle, too—hideous little thing! I only wish I had the shillings it cost, for I need a pair of new gloves badly enough."

"I wish I had it," put in Ralph, the youngest boy. "I haven't had half a crown to my name this six weeks."

"That's because you spend your money as fast as you get it," retorted Maud.

"Well, that's better than spending it on rubbishy old things," said Mrs. Bevel, "that you and children, as you do, Miss Frink."

"Children, hush!" cried Mrs. Bevel. "It's pretty hard on us all," observed Bryan, the elder son. "I asked the governor this morning if he couldn't afford to give us a run on the Continent this vacation—just a short one, you know, with a second class ticket, I don't want to travel swell—and he said, in a sort of abstracted way, as if it were of no consequence in the world, 'No, I think not. There's Slater's sale coming, and I've been watching his Henri Deux these five years. I shall want all my ready money, my boy.' Henri Deux, indeed! Wind's that! Some rubbishy old plate, I suppose, which I should like to smash."

"And the worst is," put in Mrs. Bevel, "that these things your father buys are like so much money thrown into the sea. Nobody but he will ever think of wanting them. There's no sale for such old rubbish—none whatever. It's just so much out of your fortunes, my dears."

"Only papa enjoys them so much," ventured Rose, the youngest girl. Out of the large family, she was the only one who had the least sympathy with her father's pursuits. It was the sympathy of affection—unappreciative, but comforting.

Mr. Bevel climbed the stairs, like one who bears a burden. A literal burden it turned out to be; for presently he entered, carrying in both arms a huge grotesque wooden sign-board. A flush of pleasure tinged his thin face.

"See, Mary," he exclaimed—"see, my dear, what a windfall I have just picked up. This is the identical sign of La Belle Sauvage, which was one of the first taverns coffee-houses a century or more ago. I dare say you'd find mention of it in the Spectator if you'll look, or the Rambler. See what a quaint thing it is. The head was black and red once, but it's faded brown now. And do you notice this little extinguisher below? That was for the link-boys to put out their torches with. London was a queer old place in those days, and I don't know when I've been so pleased with anything;" and he rubbed his hands.

"Good gracious!" sighed Mrs. Bevel, while Maud pertly asked: "What on earth are you going to do with it, pa?"

"Do with it! It's a curiosity, my dear."

"Oh! And what did it cost, pa?"

"That's the best part of it all," said the happy collector, again rubbing his hands. "I got it for a song—only two pounds fifteen."

"Two pounds fifteen!" surmised Maud. "Oh, pa, when we all need so many things!"

"Two pounds fifteen!" chimed in Matilda, almost crying; "and those lovely lace vases only ten and six; and you wouldn't even look at those, pa!"

"Jo, George! It's quite too bad," muttered Bryan. "My rusmal ticket would only have been six pounds;" while Mrs. Bevel repeated, in a still fainter tone, "Good gracious!" as if her cup of woe were indeed full.

Dejected and discomfited, her husband slunk away his bric-a-brac glow of satisfaction merged into sudden depression and penitence. No one but Rose followed. She found him in the further drawing-room, propping his purchase up on a little Chippendale card table, with all the light gone out of his face. He did not seem to care about the sign-board any longer.

"It's a very curious thing, isn't it, papa?" she said, slipping her hand into his arm. "I never saw anything like it before."

"No, my dear. I suppose not; and you are not likely to see anything like it again. Most of these old signs have been destroyed; they are growing scarcer every day." He began to tell her the history of the old coffee-house, and as he talked his cheerfulness gradually returned. Rose was often a comfort to her father—the only one he had, poor man, in the family, by whom his ruling passion was held to be a misnomer and wrong and daily disadvantage.

Time went on. Old Mr. Bevel's collection became gradually celebrated among the more rapidly increasing army of bric-a-brac fanciers. Now and again some stranger would call at the house and ask leave to inspect his or her particular object; but these visits remained a perpetual puzzle to Mrs. Bevel and her brood. What on earth could any one find to rave about in those old things? Too completely aside from the world of fashion to have the faintest notion of its ebbs and flows, they never imagined that the curtailing which to them remained a standing grievance had become of interest in the eyes of those "higher circles" of which they read and dreamed. Maud's marriage was still deferred till augmented income should warrant it. Bryan and Ralph had plans which only money could further. Matilda, and even little Rose, experienced the lack of certain private gratifications; and the spare cash, "which would have made us all so comfortable," thought Mrs. Bevel, was mercilessly locked up in the quaint and multifarious wares which filled the house to the exclusion of more desirable things. "I declare, I would almost as soon he did something wicked which wasn't quite so very criminal, thought the poor wife, and then chid herself for the thought.

She could herself again and more easily when, a little later, it became evident that her husband was declining in health. Never a strong man, it attracted little attention at first that he became unusually exhausted, more by daily walks; but when the walk gradually shortened, and at last one eventful morning there was no walk at all, and Mr. Bevel, for the first time within the memory of man, remained in doors all day, Mrs. Bevel's anxieties, slumbering till then, awoke to full life, and communicated themselves to her children. The result was much well-meant but wearisome restriction. Papa was to eat this, not eat that; must not walk, or talk himself, or talk too long—above all, must not follow his own inclinations in anything. Very patiently did Mr. Bevel endure these cares, but he did not improve under them. His occupation was gone with his failing strength. The experienced fingers which had handled so many choice things lay idle now, with nothing worth handling within reach. Life had lost its savor for him; he made haste, as it were, to be gone from it. And almost before his family realized that there was cause for alarm, all was over.

The last morning of his life he was lifted, at his own request, into an ancient ebony chair, spoil of some Siennese palace, which was one of his special treasures. High, hard, straight-backed, it was not the most commodious resting-place for a sick man, but Mr. Bevel seemed to like it, as he lay, propped with pillows, gently following with his feeble fingers the rich and intricate wandering of the ivory pattern with which it was inlaid. His wife and daughters were with him; they rarely left him now.

"My little Rose," he said, after a long silence, "I should like you to keep this chair. You are the only one who cares for such things. Keep it for your own, my dear. The rest wouldn't value. I made my way a while ago," he continued, after a short silence. "I have tried to do fairly by you all, and to act justly. Some of you have thought hard of me at times, I am afraid, for buying so many things, but you'll get over that later. All the arrangements are made for the sale of everything—advertising and all. You are not to have any trouble in the matter," turning to his wife. "All is left in the hands of Leonard Ashe. He knows the full value of everything, and will see all properly done. The sale is to be advertised for two months beforehand. Ashe will attend to that."

"Yes, my dear, yes," replied Mrs. Bevel, soothingly. "Don't worry your poor head about those old things now;" while even at that mournful moment Matilda could not refrain from a glance at Maud, which meant, "Poor papa! still harping on that absurd craze of his!" Only little Rose, with a pitiful tenderness, stroked and kissed the wasted hand. Misunderstood in death as in life, old Mr. Bevel passed from his narrow corner of this narrow world into the wide liberty of the next.

The will was read in due time. Matters proved in a worse condition even than the family had feared. There was a small life insurance for the benefit of the widow, two thousand pounds in consols, the house—that was all, save the collection whose proceeds—so the will ran—were to be divided among the six heirs. Mrs. Bevel was furious, the others indignant.

"It was really like insanity," protested Maud. "If we had only guessed it, and stopped papa in time! Why Arthur estimates that pa could not have spent less than seven thousand pounds in buying those trumpery things. Seven thousand pounds! And think what that would be to us now."

"Oh dear! oh dear! how comfortable we all could have been!" moaned her mother, while Matilda, between angry sobs, protested that she "never sanmid be able to forgive pa quite. It seemed dreadful to say such a thing, but she couldn't help it. It seemed as if he hadn't cared a bit for his own family, only for those horrid, useless, ugly old duds, which nobody would look at twice as long as the world stood."

"Oh, Mattie! don't talk so," urged her mother. "Your pa never meant any wrong. It was just a disease with him to buy things. And they'll fetch something, I dare say. We shall get a start back."

"Yes, a couple of hundred pounds, perhaps. What's that out of seven thousand pounds? I declare, to think of it makes me feel as if I should like to bite somebody," remarked the amiable Matilda, with a click of her sharp little teeth. The others, more outwardly resigned, were no less inwardly miserable. None of them had any hopes from the sale.

The two months advertising were duly fulfilled, and the collection removed to the auction-rooms. Very few did the same long after it was gone; but that mattered little, for its occupants were preparing to move as soon as the sale was over. They waited for that, not with so little hope or interest in the affair that it was not till late in the afternoon of the third day that Bryan trimmed himself to "race down" and learn the result. He came back so red and excited that his mother turned pale with apprehension, while the girls crowded round him.

"What's the matter? Hasit all gone wrong?"

"I always knew it would."

"Haven't they fetched anything?" this from Matilda.

The Institute.—The Teachers Institute of the district and Emmet County which caused to session Friday, was one of the most successful in interest and results, in the series. The attendance was all that could be expected, and Prof. Latta speaks in terms of highest praise of the teachers of Charlevoix County, and of the educational institutions of Charlevoix.

The Upper Rapids.—We are happy to be able to announce that the officer now granted to open the channel between Round and Pine Lakes has resulted more satisfactorily than was expected by the most sanguine. The samples, with 50% of explosive have been used of the matter with an experiment that is available to every section of the Pine Lake region in location.—The quantity of the proposed section of the immense—Mr. Bodwell has succeeded in securing pledges for nearly $700. At the head of the Lake about $300 have been raised, and Charlevoix village comes up to the scratch with over $500. Pine Lake will raise at least $300, this securing about $1,000. The proper use of these funds will secure twelve feet of water in the channel and permanently prevent it.

Teachers Institute.

Editor Sentinel:

Dear Sir.

Hoping that a brief account of the first Teachers institute ever held in our County may be of interest to some of the teachers and friends of education who were unable to attend, I will endeavor to give as correct an outline of the work as my limited space will admit. If the success of the Institute can be judged from the quality of the instruction or from the favorable comments of the members of the class then we feel safe in saying that the session just closed was all that could have properly been asked even by the most sanguine.

The enrollment of a class of thirty three members under the unfavorable circumstances of rain weather and muddy roads, even had the teachers of Charlevoix been specially alive to the question of education, and that they are willing to make some sacrifice in their chosen work.

Taking this view of the subject we feel safe in predicting that the future record of those who devoted the past week to the institute work will receive the benefit of many of the valuable suggestions made by the experienced educators who had charge of the session. The exercises of the week consisted mainly of presenting the most important principles in Arithmetic, Geography, grammar, U. S. History, orthography, reading, penmanship and even questions matters connected in school law, rules of government, the manner of conducting recitations, and the objects of recitations, in fact every subject that could be made in the experience of the teacher, was discussed as fully as time would permit.

The query box in which members were to place questions upon which they wished the views of others, formed a very instructive and interesting part of the exercises. It being impossible to present the daily programmes, I will give a sufficient outline to enable the reader and judge somewhat of the work done. In Arithmetic the principles and the manner of presenting to a class, were explained as far as necessary. In Geography, the work for the first year was presented to the class, with methods of teaching the different topics and the apparatus used, also plans for the work of more advanced classes. The first year's work in grammar of Harper's Language Series. People's Speller, and School Composition, Township, County and State in the order named. The method for the study of civil Government was nearly similar. The plan being to learn first of the school officers, and their duties, then the officers of the school Dist., next the town, County, and state officers in succession, before learning of the powers and duties of the officers of the general government. The principle upon which this order is based is one that must recommend itself to the thoughtful instructor viz: "Proceed from the known to the unknown" Law what the pupils are to learn upon what they already know, they will be the more likely to grasp and retain the new.

As an enumeration of what is considered the essentials for teaching geography may suggest to some worthy School Officers the idea of procuring the needed articles, I will give them. Fifteen cents, a small one will do. Pocket Map of the Land Dist. township, County and State. A outline map of the United States. The first two maps named can be easily constructed by the teacher the others ought to be school property.

In grammer, orthography and reading the principles were thoroughly reviewed in such a manner as to make an impression, if the methods presented by professors Latta and Johnson be followed, in even those pupils, who formerly looked with aversion upon those subjects.

And here in conclusion, I would urge upon school Dist. officers as well as teachers the necessity of taking an active interest in these institutes. The success of the one just closed, reflects great credit upon the leaders, and makes it probable that next year upon the proper application, we can have the benefit of another such meeting. In the meantime let the interest and the enthusiasm in the work of education not die out, but let it guarantee us a larger attendance at subsequent institutes.

The many visitors who attended the sessions of the institute by their presence and words of instruction and encouragement helped to lend an interest. The last session closed Friday noon, with cash and every one in the best of spirits, all seemingly well pleased and many expressing the desire that another year, they might again meet under the same instructors, as the present, as Professors Latta and Johnson had by their interest in the educational matters pertaining to the teachers of Charlevoix Co. secured the highest confidence of the entire body present of the class.

The lecture on Tuesday evening by Prof. Latta, "Child Training" and Wednesday evening by Prof. Johnson, "True Nobility, the teacher's ideal" well repaid those in attendance for venturing out in the storm.

At the close of the last session the following resolutions were offered and adopted.

Whereas, The people of Charlevoix by their kind interest in our institute, as manifested by their presence at our meetings and willingness to entertain teachers has tended to increase the usefulness of the Institute therefore,

Resolved, first that we return our thanks to the people of Charlevoix for the liberal manifestations of their interest in our work, the Trustees of the M. E. Church for the privilege of their Church in which to hold the lectures, and to Mrs. F. H. Green for the use of her Melodeon, during the session of the institute.

Resolved, That we present our thanks to Profs. Latta and Johnson for the efforts they have put forth, manifold the regular instruction of the Institute, to insure more proficiency in our future work as teachers.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

Return of Mr. Evarts' Investigating Committee—Some of the Results Attained—Small Advantages Accruing to Americans Under the Treaty, and How They Are Interfered With.

Fitz J. Babson, who, with Mr. Dwight Foster, went down to the Provinces by instructions of Secretary Evarts, to investigate the methods of fishing adopted by native and other fishermen, and to collect whatever other evidence they could relating to the vexed question now arising from the Treaty at Washington, reached home last night. Mr. Babson has given the Emery question a good deal of earnest thought and attention. He is the Collector of this, the largest fishing port on the coast, and, besides, is a citizen of public spirit and in full sympathy with all efforts looking to the full development of the material interests of his native town. Before the Halifax Commission convened he devoted a large portion of his time to collecting evidence and arranging it for the American counsel. Mr. Foster was the American agent.

The Herald correspondent called on the Collector and asked him to allow a brief review of his work to be printed. He said he would be very willing to do so, but was reluctant to anticipate the official report which he might be obliged to file with the State Department. The information, he said, was for the use of that Department, and he could not, with propriety, give it to any other person or to the country through any other channel. He said that he had gathered considerable statistical information, which only confirms his previous impressions of the actual condition of the fisheries and the treatment of our fishermen by the natives.

"All our people demand," he said, "are the same rights granted to Canadian fishermen in our ports. This we have not got, and only a modification of the treaty or its abrogation can give it to us, in my judgment."

It was also learned that a call was made on the Governor of Newfoundland, who received the Commissioners cordially and granted them all the facilities to look into the peculiarities of their inquiry. They went to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and made inquiries of fishermen along the coast and at the various harbors. The United States Consul here and the Consuls at all points touched were questioned as to the feeling of the people toward the United States fishermen, the quantity of fish caught within the three-mile limit, the means employed by Provincial and American fishermen, etc., and an immense mass of testimony has been accumulated, which will be put in shape as soon as Mr. Foster gets home. He was to leave Halifax to-day or to-morrow. The report will not be ready for some weeks. It will be a very formidable document, and will make some recommendations and reach some conclusions that are liable to endanger the whole aspect of our relations with the Dominion Government so far as this branch of industry is concerned.

A gentleman, who had been with the Commissioners in a good deal during their cruise and knew something of their work and its direction, said in conversation a day or two ago that the difficulty was not really with the British Government, but with the Canadian fishermen, who seem greatly incensed at the manner in which the Americans fish. They have all the new and improved machines for catching fish, such as traps and seines. They can thereby catch more fish in an hour than the others can in a week. The Canadians will not even allow their fellow-countrymen to use these American inventions.

The American Government paid $5,500,000 for the privilege of fishing inside the three-mile line. Now, our fishermen do not ask to fish inside this line, and, therefore, the money was thrown away. In the first place, the principal fish caught by the Americans is the cod. Now, inside the three-mile line off the Canadian shore the codfish is scarcely worth the catching. It is very small and could not find a market here at all. The fishing is all done thirty miles outside of this line. The Canadians, however, go out in their little punts and catch fifteen or twenty of these small fish and then call it a good day's work. The Americans, however, want to come inside the three-mile line to catch bait, and this bait cannot be caught every day in the same place. In fact, some days it cannot be caught at all; for the fish used for baiting the traps and seines is migratory, and must be caught where it is to be found. Now, the Americans go inside the line, throw out their seines for bait, and before they can begin work in earnest the infuriated Canadian fisherman, egged on by some wealthy capitalists, who own mens' body and soul, form a mob and drive the men away. This is done in order to compel them to buy their bait from the Canadians. The Americans are willing to buy it at a reasonable price, but when such exorbitant rates are asked they seem to prefer to catch it themselves rather than be subjected to their vile treatment.

The Canadians have no knowledge of what a treaty is. They think the waters are their own property, and that they can exclude whomsoever they please and prevent them from getting bait. Every one has read of the disturbances that have been caused by the mob objecting to our fishermen obtaining bait otherwise than by purchase. As an example of the prejudice existing against the Americans, I will relate one little incident. A fisherman was being questioned by Mr. Babson about the size of the fish near the shore, when he replied that before the Americans came there to catch bait the codfish were as large inside the line as those caught twenty miles off. He then went on to say that since the Americans came there to catch bait and then went outside to spread their seines all the large fish were attracted outside by the bait and thus left the shore. An old gentleman, hearing this, said that he had been in that harbor for forty years and had never seen a codfish larger than those caught at the present time. So that, actually, all the Americans have as their share of the treaty is permission to go into the harbor at any time.

With respect to the mackerel, it must be stated that the finest of mackerel are caught in large quantities off our own coast.

The gentleman who furnishes the above is also of the opinion that the last treaty should be abrogated. He also thinks that no treaty will have much effect till the Colonial fishermen are made to thoroughly understand the question in its every detail, and are taught some respect for a treaty between their own Government and that of another country.—Gloucester (Mass.) Cor. N. Y. Herald.

"Somebody Loves Me."

Two or three years ago the Superintendent of the Little Wanderers' Home received one morning a request from the Judge that he would come up to the Court-House. He complied directly, and found there a group of seven little girls, ragged, dirty and forlorn, beyond what even he was accustomed to see. The Judge, pointing to them (utterly homeless and friendless), said: "Mr. T——, can you take any of these?"

"Certainly, I can take them all," was the prompt reply.

"All! What in the world can you do with them?"

"I'll make women of them."

The Judge singled out one, even worse in appearance than the rest, and asked again, "What can you do with that one?"

"I'll make a woman of her, Mr. T——, especially, firmly and hopefully."

They were washed and dressed and provided with good supper and beds. The next morning they went into the school-room with the children. Mary was the name of the little girl whose chances for better things the Judge thought small. During the forenoon the teacher said to Mr. T——, in reference to her, "I never saw a child like her. I have tried for an hour to get a smile, and have failed."

Mr. T—— said afterward, himself, that her face was the saddest that he had ever seen—sorrowful beyond expression, yet she was a very little girl, only five or six years old.

Mary was to be called her into his office and said, pleasantly, "Mary, I've been your friend. I used to have a little girl here that would wait on me, and sit on my knee, and I loved her very much. A kind lady and gentleman have adopted her, and I should like for you to take her place, and be my pet now. Will you?"

A gleam of light flitted over the poor child's face, as she began to understand him. He gave her ten cents, and told her she might go to a store near by and get some candy. While she was out he took two or three newspapers, tore them into pieces, and scattered them about the room. When she returned in a few minutes he said to her: "Mary, will you clear up my office a little for me and pick up those papers, and make it look nice?"

She went to work with a will. A little more of this kind of "management"—in fact, treating her as a kind father would—wrought the desired result. She went into the school-room after dinner with so changed a look and bearing that the teacher was astonished. The child's face was absolutely radiant. She went to her and said:

"Mary, what is it? What makes you look so happy?"

"Oh, I've got some one to love me!" the child answered, earnestly, as if it were heaven come down to earth.

That was all the secret. For want of love that little one's life had been so cold and desolate that she had lost childhood's beautiful faith and hope. She could not at first believe in the reality of kindness or joy for her. It was the certainty that some one had loved her and desired her affection that lighted the child's soul and gladdened her face. Mary has since been adopted by wealthy people, and lives in a beautiful home, but more than all its beauty and comfort running like a golden thread through it all she still finds the love of her adopted father and mother.—Home (N. Y.) Sentinel.

MR. THOMAS WILSON, a very old and wealthy Baltimorean, died the other night, leaving an estate of $2,000,000. The kind old man had been for many years president of an association for helping the poor, and in this position had seen so much suffering among little children that he determined to provide a comfortable sanitarium for them. He has accordingly left an endowment of $500,000 for the "Thomas Wilson Sanitarium for the Children of the Sick Poor," and the institution will shortly be established by the trustees. Mr. Wilson left $100,000 to be used as a fuel-saving fund, his purpose being to devote the interest to the purchase of immense quantities of coal when it is cheapest, this coal to be sold to poor families at cost. It was in dealing in coal that Mr. Wilson made most of his fortune.

IT frequently happens that men forget to pay back small sums of borrowed money, while remembering to keep away from the person who should be paid. Of such are freaks of memory.—Rousseau.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—There are now in Syria five hundred girls attending evangelical churches. Twenty of them can be learned the Westminster Catechism by heart.

—The Georgia school fund amounts to $400,000, and the school population to 433,444. State Superintendent Orr earnestly advocates the adoption by that State of the Moffett ball-punch and dog-tax laws for the benefit of the schools.

—The session of the Episcopalian General Convention for the year 1879 will be held in Minneapolis, October 22. Only those delegates can vote before the meeting to the Secretary, by the several State Secretaries are entitled to be the ones to take part. In the organization of the Convention, the Occasional Sermon will be delivered on the morning of meeting by the Rev. A. J. Patterson, D. D., of Massachusetts.

The Judge, pointing to them (utterly homeless and friendless), said: "Mr. T——, can you take any of these?"

Mr. T—— said afterward, himself, that her face was the saddest that he had ever seen—sorrowful beyond expression, yet she was a very little girl, only five or six years old.

Mary was to be called her into his office and said, pleasantly, "Mary, I've been your friend. I used to have a little girl here that would wait on me, and sit on my knee, and I loved her very much. A kind lady and gentleman have adopted her, and I should like for you to take her place, and be my pet now. Will you?"

A gleam of light flitted over the poor child's face, as she began to understand him. He gave her ten cents, and told her she might go to a store near by and get some candy. While she was out he took two or three newspapers, tore them into pieces, and scattered them about the room. When she returned in a few minutes he said to her: "Mary, will you clear up my office a little for me and pick up those papers, and make it look nice?"

She went to work with a will. A little more of this kind of "management"—in fact, treating her as a kind father would—wrought the desired result. She went into the school-room after dinner with so changed a look and bearing that the teacher was astonished. The child's face was absolutely radiant. She went to her and said:

"Mary, what is it? What makes you look so happy?"

"Oh, I've got some one to love me!" the child answered, earnestly, as if it were heaven come down to earth.

That was all the secret. For want of love that little one's life had been so cold and desolate that she had lost childhood's beautiful faith and hope. She could not at first believe in the reality of kindness or joy for her. It was the certainty that some one had loved her and desired her affection that lighted the child's soul and gladdened her face. Mary has since been adopted by wealthy people, and lives in a beautiful home, but more than all its beauty and comfort running like a golden thread through it all she still finds the love of her adopted father and mother.—Home (N. Y.) Sentinel.

A Shocking Crime.

The triple murder recently committed at the village of Waynesville, Warren County, Ohio, followed by the suicide of the murderer, is in all its features a most shocking and mysterious crime. It is one of those crimes for which no assignable motive appears, and which is so fearful to contemplate by reason of the mystery of its origin as on account of the horror of its details. The murdered persons were a Mrs. Hatfie, her sister, Mrs. Clementine Weeks and the daughter of the latter, Miss Myrtle Weeks, aged eleven years. Mrs. Hatfie's maiden name was Craig, and her home was formerly in this State. Her father, John Craig, is a farmer, living near Clarksville, Hamilton County, and has a brother, Dr. Craig, somewhere hereabouts. Some nineteen years ago she was married to a man named Daniel Anderson, whose father was a physician and his brother an agent of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, of Cincinnati. One child was born to them, Willie Anderson. For some years their domestic difficulties arose and Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were divorced. She subsequently married a man named Hatfie, who afterward died. For some time past she has made her home in Waynesville, where she was esteemed and respected, her last living husband having been the wife of Stephen W. Weeks, a clerk in the Treasurer's office of Hamilton County. She had separated from her husband and gone with her daughter to visit Mrs. Hatfie. The fourth member of the household was William the only child of Mr. Anderson's by a wife who worked in a printing office in Waynesville. He is described as a rolling sort of a boy, generally thought to be pretty full of life and mischief, but not supposed to be vicious. He was a great favorite of Dime novels. Not to delay the disclosure, it may as well be stated here that he was undoubtedly the murderer, or one of the murderers, of his step-mother, aunt and cousin. The murder took place last Tuesday night a week ago and was not discovered till the Monday afternoon while, the house remained closed. Willie Anderson was at his work every day, came to the house and fed the chickens, and then entered and left the house where the dead bodies of the three murdered persons lay. In answer to the inquiry as to the last of the family he said that they had gone to Cincinnati, and this story was believed. It was not until the end of the week some of his friends noticed that he appeared melancholy and nervous, but nothing was thought of this at the time. On Saturday, however, a neighbor noticed a strange smell was noticed in the vicinity. Saturday it was more noticeable and on Sunday remark. Sunday passed, and on Monday the Town Marshal was ordered to make an investigation. He soon traced the smell to the Hatfie house, and, raising a window, discovered one of the dead bodies lying on the floor. An alarm was given, the house was secured and the other two bodies were discovered. The children had all been killed with a hatchet, and their heads and trunks were terribly gashed. On Sunday morning William Anderson took the train for Cincinnati, having previously informed some of the neighbors that his mother was sick and had requested him to come to the city. Up to the time of his leaving no change in his manner was noticed beyond a slight nervousness not unfrequently unusual with him. He went to Cincinnati, and was there in company with his father during Sunday afternoon and Monday. Tuesday morning he took the train for Waynesville, but having neither a ticket nor money, was put off a short distance out of Cincinnati. The next heard of him was a corpse at Plainville, where he committed suicide last Wednesday night, and was found in an old water-tank next morning. The circumstantial evidence in the Coroner's inquest left no doubt that he was at least concerned in the murder. For instance, a knife covered with blood was picked up under the body of one of the victims, and identified as one that had been sold to him a few days before. Another witness testified that about two weeks ago he sold young Anderson some slacked lime in a flour-sack, and this lime was scattered on and around the corpses. Other circumstances leave no doubt that he was guilty. There is reason to believe that there were two persons engaged in the murder, and suspicion naturally fell on the father, Daniel Anderson, who has occasionally visited him at Waynesville. Anderson is a carpenter in Cincinnati, and has borne a fair reputation. When arrested he talked freely, declared his readiness to go with the officers and hinted at no guilty connection or signs of guilt. He says he can prove his exact whereabouts for the last fortnight, and seems to have no fears of an investigation. The most mysterious feature of the shocking affair is the lack of any assignable motive. Daniel Anderson says William never showed any signs of insanity, nor was there insanity in the family. He was kind to his mother and regarded as a dutiful son. Since the murder two or three persons have mentioned the fact that he was a constant reader of dime novels, and it is surmised that this may have rendered his mind morbid and prepared it for the commission of murder.—Indianapolis Journal.

The Catholic Standard says that for a dutiful son of the Church to speak of a priest "secret is to commit an almost unpardonable crime."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

In dusting use a soft cloth instead of a brush or wing; the cloth will catch all the dust, and you can shake it from the window, while the brush will scatter it floating again.

Land laid down with clover is better than money deposited in the bank, drawing more interest than any bank can pay and compounding the interest oftener.—Exchange.

Potato Noodles.—Grate one dozen of boiled potatoes, add two eggs, a little salt, half a cupful of milk, enough flour to knead stiff, then cut in small pieces, then roll long and round, and put them in pan of lard to brown.

Lime Tonic.—Farmer says that land plowed from one to two months before sowing time is very much more likely to produce a good crop of wheat than if plowed late. Correct, provided the crop that springs up in the meantime is kept from rendering the ground foul.

The reason offered by the London Times for the English food being heavier in bone on his own ground by the American farmer is that farming in England is on an ancient and settled system, and only exceptionally a plan for money making. Now in the West it is amusing, because it is money-making, as it certainly is a progressive, employment.—Prairie Farmer.

The editor of the Southern Planter has been given a new method for discovering the age of a horse: "After the horse is nine years old a wrinkle comes in the eyelid at the upper corner of the lower lid and every year thereafter he has one well-defined wrinkle added to his year over nine. If a horse has three wrinkles he is twelve, and so on. It has never failed."

Sandy soils are comparatively unproductive, chiefly because they are too loose. The object of treating them should be to make them more compact. Still they are plowed as frequently as other soils and generally are plowed deeper. The extra exertion renders them more loose. There is no occasion to plow sandy land except for the purpose of destroying the weeds and grass that spring up on the surface. This may be done by an implement that will cut the roots and leave them to die by exposure to the heat of the sun. After they are dry they may be harrowed, or, if the land is to be devoted to cultivated crops, the thin turf may remain on the surface to serve as a mulch. Sandy soils are especially benefited by mulching, but are injured by plowing. A change in the mode of treatment is essential to their productiveness.—Chicago Times —Carbonate of baryta has been found to be a most efficient poison for rats and similar vermin. Indeed, at a special series of trials by the Zootechnical Institute, in connection with the Royal Agricultural College, at Proskaw, this substance was found to be more effectual than any other. It occurs as a heavy white powder, devoid of taste or smell. In the Proskaw trials the poison was mixed with four times its weight of barley meal, and pellets of the paste were introduced into the holes of the rats, house mice and field mice. A small quantity proves fatal. It appears to cause immediate and complete paralysis of the hind extremities, and that it may be assumed that mice eating of it in their holes will die within them, and so not prove destructive in their turn to domesticated animals that might otherwise devour the carcasses. It was found in practice that neither fowls nor pigeons would touch the poison either in its soft state or when hardened by the sun; so that its employment is probably free from danger to the occupants of the poultry yards. Some rabbits, on the other hand, that got access to the paste ate heartily of it and paid the penalty with their lives. Next to the carbonate of baryta paste, the ordinary phosphorus paste proved most destructive, and this, when found by experiment, is more attractive to the mice in a soft form than when hardened into pills. But it is considerably dearer than the baryta preparation, an important factor in the calculation of the farmer who has to wage war against rodents on an extensive scale.—Scientific American.

The Flower Garden.

Among inexpensive and unappreciated pleasures, there are hardly any to compare with those which the care of a flower garden furnishes. People who have never paid any attention to this pastime, who have perhaps deemed it too trifling or too easily attained to require any special care, are surprised to find how much interest and beauty can be developed in the heart of the humblest garden. Under the influence of love and attention, and rewards even beyond expectation, the plants and flowers will grow and flourish, and will repay the labor bestowed upon them a hundred-fold. Even the poorest soil may be made productive, and the most unsightly spot may be changed into a bower of beauty. Nothing is more delightful than to watch the progress of the plants from the time they first appear above the ground, and to see the leaves unfold and the buds swell and burst into bloom. Then, when the flowers are in full bloom, what a delight it is to gather them and arrange them in vases for the adornment of the parlor and dining-room! Every one who has a garden, however small, should cultivate flowers, and should encourage the children to do so. It will be a source of pleasure to them, and will help to keep them at home. Children who have gardens of their own will not be apt to wander off in search of amusement elsewhere. Flowers are the cheapest of all luxuries, and the most refining and elevating. Every one can have them, and every one should have them.—Exchange.

Why the Light Went Out.

Next time you go out on the Michigan Central Road look out for a sort on the right-hand side of the car, so that you may notice, about ten miles down the road, a little old red farm-house. The curtains will be down, the dooryard and rank weeds and tall grasses will meet the flying glances in the front yard. A month ago old Sam Rogers lived there; to-day the place is in the keeping of rats and mice and desolation. The old woman was a widow and childless. If she had a relative anywhere in this great world, those who buried her were not aware of the fact. She lived all alone, having only a bit of land and being aided by kind neighbors to raise enough to supply her wants. Seven or eight years ago, when her last child left home to meet a violent death on this same road, the men of the rails became interested in that quaint old farm-house. One night they saw a bright light in one of the windows. Its rays streamed out over the flowers and fell upon the road. A locomotive whistle thundered, and the engineer wondered over the signal. The lamp was there the next night, and the next, and it was never missed for a single night until one evening a month ago. Old Sam, deprived of insistent and children, made friends with the rolling trains and their burdens. The train-men soon found that the lamp was for them, and they watched for it. During the early evening hours they saw old Nanny Lee behind the light or at the door, and a thousand times conductors, engineers and brakemen have called cheerily through the darkness:

"Good-night, old Nanny—God bless you!"

Winter and summer the light was there. Winter and summer the train-men looked for it, and the more thoughtful ones often left a bit of money with the station men beyond to help the old woman keep the bright rays shining. The lamp was not there for one train, but for all, and all men understood the sentiment and appreciated it.

One dark night not long ago, when the wind howled and the rain drops beat fiercely against headlight and cab, the engineers missed the accustomed light. They looked for it again and again, as one suddenly misses an old landmark in a city, and when they failed to find it the hand instinctively went up to the throttle, as if danger lurked on the curve below. Each train abreast that night looked for the signal, became anxious at its absence, and made inquiries at the stations ahead and below. Next day men went down to the little old house, fearing old Nanny might be ill. There sat the lamp on the window-sill, but the oil was exhausted. In her bed, seeming to have only fallen asleep, was the poor old woman, cold and dead. Life and lamp had gone out together, and men of rough look and hardened heart sniffled, as they heard the words, "Four old women! May her spirit rest in Heaven!"—Detroit Free Press.

What the American Farmer is Doing for England.

Despite the recent brief season of fine weather in England, the long course of rain and cold days has greatly lessened the wheat harvest. Only the north of England presents a respectable harvest, while in the eastern, western and southern counties give every appearance of a very short crop. Three years of bad harvests and unusually sharp competition from this country would seem to add the last straw to the burdens on the British farmer, and bring about a total breakdown to this hitherto prosperous class. This approaching calamity is not great a change, and portends such far reaching changes, in English political life, as to command the attention of the whole world. The English farmer is, in fact, fighting for a struggle of competition with the Western farmer similar to that which the New England and New York farmer has just passed through, and from which he has come forth worsted. But in this struggle, how much greater are the odds against the Englishman than the Yankee. A careful estimate by a high American agricultural authority—Professor Sinnes—makes the rental of the English farm per from ten dollars to twenty-five dollars per acre; his expenses for manures, cultivation, etc., from forty to fifty dollars per acre; and the original investment for general outfit, some fifty dollars more per acre—making his necessary expenditure over $100 per acre. It will be seen that in rental alone he pays some three times more than the New England farmer, while all other expenses are proportionally large. Yet, wheat-farms are more and more being converted into dairy-farms and parks for game, pasture and ordinary products, throughout the Eastern and Middle States. The Eastern farmer, even with land from fifty dollars to $100 per acre, cannot compete with the Western.

The English farmer is compelled, however, to compete with the farmer or freeholder in Kansas, Dakota and Minnesota. Within the past few years the Land Loan Company of London Road could purchase his farm at a low price from the company, or (as a little distance) obtain it from the Government for nothing, put up manures and spend a few hundred dollars in "plant," and raise his thirty or forty bushels of wheat to the acre, and immediately sell it at the nearest railroad station, to be shipped to Liverpool. His rental is almost nothing, his expenses for manures and labor are light, on his outfit very small. His main expenses are labor. Against all this, his English competitor has only to add his superior skill and the cost of carriage. But the latter, by arrangements for delivery and careful management, is becoming less every year, while nature has worked against the British cultivator during the past three years. There can be but one issue to the struggle. The wheat-grower of our Western and Northwestern prairies is destined to feed the great body of the English people. The wheat-farms of England are to be turned into dairy-farms and vegetable gardens, or a great revolution is silently pass over English society; the farmers are to become freeholders and the landlords and country gentry are to lose their property and their position. No such social revolution has occurred in England as this which is threatened, since the great social changes after the pestilence of the "Black Death," in the fourteenth century. It's only wonder indigenes would be the election of the French peasantry after the Revolution, or the enfranchisement of the serfs and peasants in Hungary, Transylvania and Russia as this country. A whole class, of enormous vigor, who have, since the time of Elizabeth, carried the English race to its highest point of honor and fame, must be broken to pieces.

They are not the men to calmly await ruin. Every means will be used to avert the threatened disaster. Even protection may be temporarily resorted to. But, though slowly, yet surely, the end must come. Estates will be taken up and sold. Farmers will emigrate; laws will be passed making easier the transfer of land. Primogeniture, as a custom, will lose its power. The country gentry will become cultivators or will seek other employments. New men will become farmers, and, with lessened rental and expenses, will gradually be able to compete with American producers. The rural constituency will gradually become like our own, with the exception of love and loyalty to the throne and the aristocracy. The land will be owned by small proprietors, and the English country life will have lost its great charm and romance. England will be governed by a rural democracy, and a manufacturing and commercial middle class. The gentry will have no more political power than have the French. Great Britain itself will not be poorer for the revolution. Property will only have changed hands. The whole political structure of England will have been changed by the American farmer.—*N. Y. THE Oneida Community, of Oneida county, N. Y., have recently resolved to abandon their present marriage system. In deference to the public sentiment, which is evidently strong, it will do it. The Community is here, first to consider the question of changing the marriage establishment—both legitimate, but the last preferred.

DISCOVERY was made several days ago of another triple murder which had been committed at Waynesville, Ohio, the dead bodies of Mrs. Hatter, her six-at.-M.s. Dieselline Weeks and the daughter of the latter, aged eleven years, being found in the dwelling of Mrs. Hatte, where they had evidently lain for some time after the perpetration of the crime. Suspicion fell on William E. Anderson, fifteen years of age, " son of Mrs. Hatte by her first husband, who was the only other occupant of the house at the time and was the murder. It was subsequently ascertained that William, who, after the discovery of the bodies, had quietly consulted his watch, and, stooping to drawing himself in a water tank at Dinsville. On the 4th D. R. Anderson, father of William, a resident in Cincinnati, was arrested and taken to Waynesville, under suspicion that he might have had something to do with the horrible crime. Those who knew him say they did not believe him guilty or that he had any guilty knowledge of the affair. A pile of rubbish was found in the room belonging to the young man Wm. Hatte. It contains papers with flaunty-headed sketches, outlines of fights in barns and saw, where daggers, bowieknives and pistols flash and gleam in the hands of men and boys whose faces betoken nothing but the basest instincts. It would have been a convenient reader of these novels, and it is thought that this mind had been poisoned and rendered morbid by what it had looked.

Personal and Political.

THE news from the election in Maine received on the morning of the 9th indicated a plurality for the Republican candidate for Governor of about 30,000 over the Greenback candidate, and about 40,000 over the Democratic candidate. On joint ballot the Legislature will be largely Republican. Davis (Republican) for Governor would probably lack between 1,000 and 3,000 of having a majority over both opponents.

THE canvass of the vote cast in San Francisco at the recent election was completed on the 8th, showing the following result: The Workingmen elect the Mayor, Sheriff, Auditor, Treasurer, Tax Collector, Public Administrator, Surveyor, District City and County Attorneys, Police Judges, one Supervisor, five members of the Board of Education, a Railroad Commissioner for the City District. The Republicans elect the Assessor, Recorder, Coroner, County Clerk, Superintendent of Schools, Superintendent of Streets, eleven Supervisors, seven members of the Board of Education, a member of the State Board of Equalization, and receive Congressman Davis. The returns from the State at large received up to the evening of the 9th left no doubt that Beckius and the Republican State ticket had carried the State by from 20,000 to 25,000 majority. It was conceded on all hands that the Republicans had elected all the Congressmen.

THE Wisconsin Democratic State Convention met at Madison on the 9th, and nominated, by acclamation, Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, for Governor. The resolutions declare the Union to be indissoluble, and that the National Government is, within the limits of the powers delegated by the Constitution and its amendments, supreme, and all powers not thereby delegated to the United States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people; denounce the course of the Republican party in the "use of the military to overawe electors and control elections," etc.; declare the inauguration of Mr. Hayes "into the Presidential office, to which Mr. Tilden was constitutionally elected," to have been the "highest crime ever successfully perpetrated against the spirit of the institutions of republican liberty;" denounce and condemn whatever of intimidation, violence and fraud has been practiced by means and unrecognized agencies on either side, and wherever done; declare against the payment of any claims of any character to State or individuals engaged in or supporting the late rebellion, resulting from or growing out of the injury or destruction of property in the war; declare that the Constitutional currency of the country, and the basis of all other, should be gold and silver coin, and that all National Treasury notes and authorized currency should be convertible into the same on demand; etc., etc.

THE prosecution in the case of Henry Dailey, on trial for the murder of Cornelia Chisholm, rested its case on the 10th. The object had been to establish a conspiracy on the part of defendant and others to kill Justice Chisholm, Gilbert and Boesbaum, and that, in carrying out the conspiracy, Cornelia and other persons were killed. The defense had a number of witnesses to testify.

THE Nebraska Democratic State Convention met at Lincoln on the 10th, and made the following nominations: Supreme Judge, E. Wakely; Regents of the University, Dr. A. Bear and A. J. Sawyer. District Judicial nominations were also made in the First, Third and Fourth districts. The resolutions adopted affirm the time-honored principles of the party; deprecate the violation of Indian treaties by the Government; declare that the military should be held in strict subordination to the civil power; deny the right of the Federal Administration to keep an army to control the vote of the people; insist upon a free ballot, and oppose the appointment of officers to control elections; demand economy in the administration of affairs, and arraign the Republican party of the State and Nation for its wasteful extravagance; etc., etc.

THE Democratic State Convention of New York was held at Syracuse on the 10th and 11th. A platform was adopted demanding honest elections and an honest count of votes; opposing all favoritism, and declaring that no single interest or class of persons should be protected at the expense of any other; declaring a tolled in gold and silver as the Constitutional money of the country, and condemning the speculative methods of the present Secretary of the Treasury, and the questionable favoritism he has shown to particular monetary institutions and so-called syndicates, and the extravagance he has permitted in his Department in connection with his refunding schemes; looking "with shame and sorrow on the disgraceful reputation of the professions of Civil-Service reform by the Executive and his supporters," and declaring that the 104,000 Federal officers constitute an army which is being used to keep the Republican party in power; etc. After the platform was read and adopted nominations for Governor were made amid considerable excitement, the Anti-Tammanyite nominating Governor Robinson and the Tammany men General H. W. Slocum. A motion was then made to nominate State Senator John C. Jacobs (the Chairman of the Convention) by acclamation, which motion was, amid much confusion, declared by the Secretary to have been carried. As soon as order could be restored, Mr. Jacobs said if he had been consulted concerning the nomination which had been made he would have declined it. A motion was subsequently made and carried to call the roll for nominations for Governor, pending which the Tammany delegation, headed by Messrs. Dunshman and Schultz—who emphatically declared that under no circumstances would the Democracy support Governor Robinson—retired from the hall. The vote on the nomination for Governor was then taken and resulted as follows: Robinson, 248; Slocum, 56; scattering, 2. The nomination of Mr. Robinson was then made unanimous. Chauncey N. Potter was nominated for Lieutenant Governor; Alien G. Beach, for Secretary of State; James Mackin, for State Treasurer.

THE Tammany bolters from the New York Democratic State Convention assembled in an adjacent hall on the afternoon of the 11th, and organized an Independent Convention. David Hadley Field was chosen Chairman. John Kelly was nominated for Governor, and accepted in a speech in which he promised that Robinson should be defeated. A committee of fifteen was raised to select the remainder of the ticket, and the Convention adjourned.

ALEXANDER MITCHELL, recently nominated to the Governorship by the Wisconsin State Democratic Convention, has called from Looking for land and sheeplife declination: He says he will not serve if elected.

A WASHINGTON special of the 11th says it had been decided to appoint Excellency Bayton, of New York, as Minister to Great Britain.

THE Massachusetts Greenbackers met in State Convention in Boston on the 12th and nominated General B. F. Butler for Governor and Wendell Phillips for Lieutenant-Governor.

THE Maryland Republicans met in State convention at Baltimore on the 12th. Ex-Postmaster-General Creswell was first nominated for Governor, but he declined, and James A. Gary was nominated. Republicans were elected to the following Congressional districts: Charles B. Roberts in the Second, Edward Stevenson in the Fifth, and Jesse Hamlin in the Sixth. The platform declares among other things, that in reality more fully than has ever yet been done the main object of a government of the people as expressed in the Declaration of Independence and the preamble to the Constitution, a new party is necessary. An Associated Press dispatch says the Socialist element was largely predominant in the second day's session, and at times the Convention was exceedingly boisterous.

A Little White Lamb.

On the day in March, 1875, the fourteenth anniversary of which Mrs. Virginia was doing its most destructive work, a white lamb, no larger than an ordinary house cat, was safely deposited, evening, in the yard of Mr. Don Prather, an old gentleman who lives near Berzelia, on the Georgia road. Soon after the lamb was discovered some one of Mr. Prather's family ran out, picked it up and carried it into the house. Where it came from no one knew, but it was fed and warmed and nurtured and became a great pet in the household. In fact, like Mary's lamb, it followed Mr. Prather about all the time.

After inquiries, Mr. Prather could find no one who owned a flock of sheep in the direction from which the cyclone came for a distance of twenty miles, and where his pet came from was more of a mystery than ever. At any rate it grew to be a fine healthy sheep, and as the years passed it was regularly sheared and the wool applied to domestic uses. There was no other sheep on the place, and it is doubtful if ever this lamb saw another of its species since the memorable March wind took her upon its wings and deposited her safely in Mr. Prather's yard. This has been over six years ago, and the yield of wool from this fast sheep has averaged annually about five pounds. Mr. Prather brought to town this year's clip, which netted six pounds, for which he received twenty five cents per pound. —Augusta (Ga.) News.

GRANDFATHER'S GARRET.

The kitchen fire's with an ardent devotion,
For the three compliments cakes and tonight are made;
Like the old orchard the barn and the store-house,
But the garret thrives everything else in the shade.

With its moss and its dust and its fastness of cobwebs,
Its long rafters leaning against the dim, steep-pitched light
Trans-forms into plants all ready to seize us.

And at first makes us tremble and shudder with fright

In this worm-eaten chest, on the left we can slowly Wrap in the pages of which grandma was weigh
Her look at our touch it now flutters to pieces,
Its yellowed manuscript, its richness has fled.
Here heaps of white dust show where moth-bees have withered,
Sad songs gathered and here showed away.
While the mice have their way with butterfly
Deeply under the covers are the coats which the Fattening chosen daughters that old Time
Has built.

Here's a wedding-dress of satin, rustling and yellow
With old-fashioned flowers, now scarcely seen;
Its long waist and sleeves and the skirt's ample measure
Full of the queer fashions that once were in vogue.

Then there's the bonnet of beaver, with strings of satin,
Scarcely a trace of its former beauty remains;
Its ribbons and feathers have long since vanished,
And the poor beaver is battered and worn and stained.

Here's a pair of shoes, too, with long, pointed toes and
Two buckles that particle to Lexington cavalry;
A sword with a handsome deep rusting its Sheath, and one again the sweet sunshine
Will bloom.

While we leave to the swallows full away and Shoemakers
Of the nests, an accident, the colonists and Gloom.

THE TRANSPLANTED TRANSFORMED.

A Tale of Blood.

If you live in Downshire and do not know the f f lendells of f f lendell Court, you are unknown. Indeed, the circumstances of their name being spelt with a little fs, and pronounced Fendall, stamps it with a peculiar aristocracy. Radicals, indeed—persons who imagine themselves to be radicals—assert that there was at one time no such thing as a capital in our alphabet, and that it was instituted by the duplication of the small letters. As intelligence increased, capitals were invented, and the last persons to use them were, of course, the most illiterate; so that the retention of the two small fs is not—intellectually speaking—a fondness for the letter f on the part of the other hand, as a token of antiquity, it is invaluable. The possession of a name that nobody can pronounce without instruction is also obviously a great inheritance, and in this case it was the more valuable from the fact that the owner of a f f lendell of Downshire having been distinguished in any other way. The family had "flourished" for centuries, it is true, and had been prominent and well to flourish, and, like it, must of it was underground.

Sir Geoffrey Fendall, (for we will not take the liberty of spelling his name as it was pronounced, as though he were an ordinary Christian), the present head of the f chart, was a widower, childless and stricken in years. The long line which had bowed as directly as a pawn in chess for so many generations had at last failed, and the succession was going astray, by even zigzag—like the knight's move—in a remote quarter. A young Percival Fendall, of Lincoln's Inn, barrister at law. His father had selected as a very problematic prosperity, the income from which had been in no way supplemented by the head of the family, and had bequeathed it in a reduced condition to his son. The former had discovered by bitter experience that the fact of his name being spelt with two fs did not enhance its financial value at the back of a bill: while the latter was seriously thinking of discarding the pestilently superfluous letter, as an affectation out of which nothing had ever come but ridicule, when suddenly old Geoffrey, acting under advice, (not legal, but medical), awoke to the fact of his heir-presumptive's existence. He wrote from Downshire with his own hand to invite Percival to Fendall Court.

Most young men would have jumped at such an offer, not so Percival himself by any means inclined to its possible advantages; but he was a man of that disposition which, in poor people, is called obstinacy in persons of moderate means, firmness; and in rich people, decision or character. Thanks to nobody but himself, he was surely but slowly making his way in the world, and he was not disposed to barter his independence even for the reversion of the family estate. This was not entailed upon him, but it would have been contrary to all traditions of the house with two fs that Cousin Geoffrey should pass it to any other than the natural heir. The young man knew, in fact, that unless he gave his kinsman some grave cause of offence, he would rule the reign in his stead. Would it not be better, therefore, as he had not an idea in common with the old Squire that they should keep apart, so that no offense could be given by him? Percival certainly did not wish to go to Downshire. It was November, and, since he was no sportsman, he greatly preferred London, at that season, to the country; just whole, Percival's hesitation had perhaps done him good. If he had shown himself eagerly desirous to accede to his kinsman's wishes it would possibly have been set down by Sir Geoffrey to anything but disinterestedness, and might have even suggested doubts. A subject very distasteful to the head of the f f lendells. An independence of spirit which had originally given was to his wishes was not unpardonable, for it exemplified the spouse of the will which had subdued it.

The Baronet himself volunteered to be the young man's guide over the picture gallery and the stables, (the horse, we may be sure, was a favored animal with him), and gave him to understand less by words than by his confidential tone that at some time or another, though at a date so distant that it would be almost in shade to it, all these things might be his own—if he behaved himself.

It was well understood in Downshire that grand behavior in Sir Geoffrey's eyes was doing what Sir Geoffrey desired, and for three days Percival's behavior was unexceptionable. On the fourth morning, however, it became infamous.

On the previous evening there had been a large dinner party composed chiefly of the magnates of the county, who had treated the young barrister with civility, but had sufficiently let it be extent their opinion of his prospects; and the young ladies had been at least as gracious as their fathers and mothers.

"Percival, did you notice the girl in blue, last night?" inquired Sir Geoffrey, snipping off the end of his after-breakfast cigar and proceeding to light it.

"Amelia Elton, Lord Wraxall's daughter. It is my intention that you shall marry her."

Percival lifted his eyebrows. "It can't be done, Sir Geoffrey"—here he also lit his cigar with great deliberation—"that is if I continue to live in England. We should have to go to Salt Lake City, where bigamy is permissible."

"What the dickens do you mean, sir?" exclaimed the Baronet. "Have you a wife already?"

"No, Sir Geoffrey." Percival could not help wondering to himself what would have happened had he answered "Yes." Would his cousin have had an apoplectic fit (he looked very near it as it was) and gone off the hooks at once, leaving everybody happy ever afterwards, or would he have sent for his lawyer and devised everything he had to the County Lunatic Asylum on the spot? Percival felt that this critical matter must crop up sooner or later, and had nerved himself for the encounter. "I have no wife," he went on, "but, while I am single, Sir Geoffrey, so far as my future is concerned, I am engaged to be married."

"What, to that hop-picker's daughter?" thundered the old man, who, it seemed, had been making keener inquiries into Percival's affairs than he had any idea of.

"Well, sir, her father is a hop-merchant," returned the young man, quietly, "and he says that my prospects are pretty pickings; but I don't think he would like another member of the family to be called a hop-picker. I may, perhaps, be allowed to add that your use of the term is not very polite to me."

His face was very white, and looked all the whiter by comparison with his companion's, which was scarlet. They were both in a frightful rage, the one at a white heat, the other boiling.

"And who the deuce are you?" exclaimed Sir Geoffrey, in precisely the same tone (though he was such an aristocrat) as the butcher's boy used who, lading run the leg of his wooden tray into the Duke's eye, inquired of him: Who the deuce he was that he should be so particular about his eyesight?

"My name is Percival Fendall, sir. A name that boasts better blood than you, lausmuch as he can count a generation beyond you. This reply, intended to be satirical, was an inspiration, and had quite the contrary effect to what he had expected. He had accidentally protected himself as it were by this interposition of the other's fetish, as though it had been a shield.

"By Jove, that's true," said Sir Geoffrey, regarding him with undisguised admiration. "You're the eleventh of us, though not quite in the direct line. I am glad you appreciate the circumstance at its full value. I had been told by a mischievous fellow that you had been throwing of spelling our name with a capital F."

"That would be blasphemy, indeed," said Percival, without moving a muscle.

"Of course it would," put in the Baronet eagerly. "I perceive that my informant was a liar. You are worthy of your name, and you were only joking though he observed that I didn't like and —when you talked of being engaged to this Miss Lake."

"Pardon, sir, Lake her name," continued Percival, in a mumfled calm: "it is a very decent one, though she doesn't spell it with two little fs. She is a dab-hand—indeed, honorable gentlewoman, and I mean to marry her."

"What, without my consent?"

"No, Sir Geoffrey. I hope, with your consent. You have only to see her, and I venture to think you will confess that Miss—the young lady in question—is worth your while to call a fine, whom you were so good as to recommend to me—cannot hold a candle to her."

"But her blood, sir? You, of all men, should understand the importance, the necessity, the indispensability—"

The Baronet supplied by expression and gesture what was wanting to him in words.

"I do, Sir Geoffrey. Science has lately corroborated your opinion upon that point. To persons about to marry it recommends the microscope. Mary's blood shall be subjected to investigation."

"What nonsense you talk! As if it could possibly be illegal like ours! Be sure have your wife—or rather how you venture beyond trifling—with persons of this class. A blot on the escutcheon, remember, is unerasable.

"If a fendall were to break his word, Sir Geoffrey, would not that be a blot on the escutcheon?"

It was cruel of Percival to place his kinsman on the horns of such a dilemma. But there is no fetish so utterly illogical—and, to say truth, so selfish and egotistical—as that of blood.

"The promise was extracted from you by passion," answered the old man, "and is therefore invalid." Then, as if aware of the monstrosity of this position, he went hurriedly on—as after one has skimmed over that too-to-paint the horrors of an unspoken marriage. "Look at young Lascelles; if he had married as his uncle wished him, he might have stood for the county; a man whose ancestry is only second to our own, but who chose to throw himself away upon a female nobody, respectable, I dare say, she may be, but her father lives in Baker street, and is of the same of dirties. What was the result of it all? Why, young Lascelles was compelled to walk the hospitals."

If he had been made to walk the plank, it is impossible that Sir Geoffrey could have spoken of the fact with more sincere compassion for the young man's unhappy fate.

"I know Lascelles," said Percival, cheerfully; "he lives close to the Blakes."

"Very likely," put in Sir Geoffrey, dryly.

"And has already acquired a good practice," continued the young man. "He told me he had first got to know me when he was subjected to his uncle's whims and caprices."

This was a touchstone. Sir Geoffrey seized the bell-rope to summon the footman to show his kinsman to the door, but by the time the menial entered his master's passion had subsided more. He only said, "Make up the fire." The fact was the motion of that extra gesticulation which Percival had boasted of had seized on what the old Baronet "called his mind," and placed the young man in a position of positive superiority.

"Look here, Percival," he said. "Just to oblige you I'll see this young woman, and if I'm disposed to like her you must promise me to break off your engagement."

"It is impossible that you should be dissatisfied with her," said Percival, gallantly, but evasively.

The old gentleman had got an idea—rather an unusual event with the Fendalls—and hence it was the more to be regretted that it was an unworthy of them.

If he found this Mary Blake—"honorable and delicate-minded" as Percival had described, he might work upon her feelings by representing that she was ruining the young man's prospects; if, on the other hand, she was mercenary, he might buy he off.

Accordingly, in due course Sir Geoffrey came up to London, and an interview was arranged between himself and Mary, after which Percival received the following letter:

MY DEAR COUSIN: Love was not blinded me, for I said that the young person is very good-looking, but it has stifled your sense of hearing. Miss B. drops her h—one h I can swear to, it was in "hospital." This is not her fault, of course, but her misfortune. It is to the blood. If you marry her—being what she is, not only will you shall never have one scrap of the f f lendell land, nor one shilling of the f f lendell money. Yours faithfully,

G. F.

The old Baronet would not have dared to write this but that he had, so he flattered himself, won over poor Mary to his side. He had painted to her the splendid prospects that awaited Percival, but which her marriage with him would dissipate forever; and had appealed to her love itself to discard her lover.

He did not effect what he had hoped, but yet succeeded in one point. The thought that she would be the cause of her Percival's future being destroyed, preyed on her mind and produced a dangerous illness. Percival was heart-broken, and had only just spirit enough left to direct an envelope to Sir Geoffrey, including a piece of his mind. It was an ugly fragment, and thus concluded:

"If through your infernal egotism my Mary dies, I will take out letters patent and change the idiotic name of f f lendell to Bunce-Scrubby."

Sir Geoffrey was reduced to despair by this frightful menace.

In the meantime poor Mary got weaker and weaker, and had homorrhage from the lungs, or more probably of the heart. The blood of the Blakes, though an inferior fluid, was necessary to her existence, and she was rapidly sinking. Dr. Lascelles, who was called in in consultation, said: "There is only one thing that can save this young lady's life. We must try transfusion."

The other doctor—who was of the old school—shook his head as only doctors can.

Dr. Lascelles understood at once, from the great significance of the gesture, that he had never so much as heard of the operation.

"I felt sure you would agree with me," he said, was the sweet smile that had won his way to professional success—for its practice lay chiefly among the ladies. "You remember Playfair's directions, without doubt?" And he told him what they were.

"One of us two must sustain this ebbing life."

"I think it had better be you," returned the other, hastily. "There's nothing like new blood—I mean young blood."

"True; I am young and strong: I can't see a beautiful creature like this slipping through our hands." And he bared his arm to the elbow.

Two months afterward Sir Geoffrey received the following letter from Percival, written under compulsion at his wife's dictation:

DEAR COUSIN: Love was not blinded me, for I said that the young person is very good-looking, but it has stifled your sense of hearing. Miss B. drops her h—one h I can swear to, it was in "hospital." MARINE.—The scow Blue Bells is shipping a new foremast at the foot of Mason street.

THE steamer Nellie Booth is hauled out to tighten a loose wheel. Will be afloat today.

HON. E. H. GREEN has just added 48 volumes to his law library, among which is a new complete set of Wisconsin Reports.

MESSRS. Ells and Minnie Cooper of this place, accompanied R. N. Goodsell and family to Grand Rapids, and will remain there some time.

COL. MANSFIELD, in his annual report to the Chief of Engineers, asks for an appropriation of $30,000 for next season's work on Charlevoix harbor.

A young daughter of R. N. Goodsell fell and broke her arm on the 15th. Dr. Perrin set it and the family left the same day for their home in Grand Rapids.

THE Herald office got out the premium list for the Grand Traverse Agricultural Society, and for artistic design and typographical skill it walks away with a good many city jobs of the kind

THE HARBOR.—Corkin, Stickney & Crums Dredge No. 3 is at work at the mouth of the harbor, and will probably complete the work on the Government contract in about ten more working days, and will leave the river with nearly thirteen feet of water. The third and last crib in the contract was successfully placed on Friday afternoon, and Mr. Nicholls will proceed with the superstructure as soon as timber can be secured.

NEW TYPE.—The SENTINEL office is in receipt of a large quantity of new wood and metal type for programme and poster work, and is turning out some really good work.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.—Mrs. Carpenter has a new advertisement in this issue. Her millinery establishment is rapidly growing in popularity as well as enlarging in stock, and its permanence and growth is assured.

THE FURNACE.—We are able to state that the prospects for the furnace is so far certain that negotiations are now in progress between the Pine Lake Iron Company and Samuel Holland for the purchase of his farm for the site of the works. It is expected that work will be commenced early in October.

ANOTHER ATTORNEY.—At the recent term of the Circuit Court for this county Supervisor James A. Keat of South Arm, was admitted to practice in Circuit Court. Mr. Keat ran the gauntlet of a searching examination by the three Charlevoix attorneys, and acquitted himself creditably. We congratulate Mr. Keat and the profession. He will establish an office at South Arm.

MR. HARWOOD, of Banks, gives us the following figures in regard to his crops this fall: From 20 acres of ground, 360 bushels of wheat—a yield of 18 bushels per acre. From 8½ acres, 323 bushels of oats—a yield of 36 bushels per acre. From 14 acres, 33 bushels of barley. From 1½ acres, 21 bushels of peas. For a dry and unfavorable season, this does not sound badly.

A COLLISION.—The captains of the tugs Minnie Warren and Com. Ayer, one day last week got their eyes simultaneously open a vessel in the offing, and started for their game. The Commodore rounded up to the vessels bows, and the Minnie ranged a straight course for the lee, and they collided, jarring the Minnie so that her whistle fell into the lake, and discharged her steam. The result was, Capt. Williams had to tow in both tug and vessel. The Minnie is now out with a brass new chime whistle.

CIRCUIT COURT.—At the September term of the Circuit Court for Charlevoix county, the following cases was disposed of:

Matchoff vs. Tullock.—jury trial—Clark for plaintiff and Eaton for defendant—judgement for plaintiff of $3.60.

The case of Shapton vs. Himebaugh—Eaton for plaintiff—was settled.

To every one that smokes! Go to Crane & Dormans and get your tobacco.

THE UPPER RIVER.—The movement to secure the opening of the upper channel into Pine Lake has so far been successful to a remarkable degree. The people of the whole region, with few exceptions, have done nobly, and we are able to state that the opening of the channel is a foregone conclusion. About $2,000 has been pledged, where only about $1,200 was expected. Yet the entire amount can be used to good advantage, in making the work more extensive and permanent than was at first hoped for. It has been proposed that a committee be made up from the several sections interested, to confer as to best plan to pursue, and we endorse the proposition. This matter is one of vital interest to our section, and prompt, energetic action is necessary. Thedredge will commence the work as soon as the Government work is completed.

A BUSINESS CHANGE.—As soon as the business can be closed up the firm of J. E. Grielick & Co. will be dissolved. It will probably require a month or two to do this. Mr. Grielick will, however continue the business. He has for several years owned a valuable tract of four acres of land adjoining the town on the west side, and giving a water front of twenty-five rods on the bay. It is this intention to at once begin the improvement of this tract, to erect suitable buildings this fall, to which he will remove the mill-work and and valuable machinery now in the factory of J. E. Grielick & Co. and early in the spring begin on quite an extensive scale the manufacture of sash, doors, blinds, mouldings, etc, and conduct a general jobbing business.

As our readers are aware Mr. Grielick has had twelve years experience in this business, and is perfectly familiar with it in all its details. His acquaintance and business connections extend throughout the entire Grand Traverse region, and he has many friends who will be glad to wish him all success.

It is probably well known to all that the "C&C" of this firm is Hannah, Lay & Co. with whom Mr. Grielick has been connected in one capacity or another for the last eighteen years. He now retires from the business connection with the kindliest feeling, and the best wishes of his so long time employers.

Mr. Grielick's younger brother, William, will be connected with him in the business.—Herald.

THE Quarter-Centennial celebration of the settlement of Kansas was held at Lawrence on the 16th and was a magnificent success. It is estimated that twenty thousand people were in attendance. The governor and most of the State officers were present and participated in the ceremonies. The leading address was by Rev. Edward Everett Hale of Boston.

THE Wisconsin State Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Delavan, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 16th. Loss $70,000.

SHORTLY after midnight on the morning of the 19th a fire broke out in a three-story, mansard house on Hanover street, in South Boston, Mass. Nearly all the occupants—principally Germans—were asleep at the time, and the fire made such rapid headway that before those in the upper story could descend all avenues of escape were cut off, and the imprisoned victims appeared on the roof and at the windows in a vain attempt to find safety. Several were burned to death, and many others who jumped from the building were seriously injured.

THE striking workmen at Fall River, Mass., on the 19th attacked a party of French men, women and children, who had been brought from Canada to take some of the vacant places in the mills there, and drove them through the town, hurling stones at them and beating and kicking them. Several of the women and children were very badly hurt.

A FEW days ago a seven-year-old boy named John B. Rasser died of hydrophobia at Cleveland, Ohio, after an illness of nine days. He was bitten by a dog about two months before the disease was developed in his system. The dog showed a preference at the same time the boy was bitten.

Transfers of coin for this purpose will be made to any Assistant Treasurer when necessary by the Treasurer of the United States in Washington, by application within Standard silver dollars may also be assumed as necessitous.

THE United States Secretary of War has completed his estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. They aggregate $40,-983,078, being a reduction of $34,550 over the estimates made for the current fiscal year. The original estimates submitted by the heads of bureaus aggregated $54,191,958, but they were reduced by the Secretary to the thousand.

Personal and Political.

THE Kennebec (Me.) Journal of the 20th contains official returns from the entire State, with the exception of twenty small towns and plantations, with the following result: Davis (Rep.), 62,012; Smith (Greenback), 47,388; Garcelon (Dem.), 21,161. Davis' plurality over the Greenback ticket is, according to these figures, 20,624, and over the Democratic ticket, 40,851. The returns from the remaining towns will not essentially change the result. Davis will lack about a thousand votes of having a majority over all competitors.

JEFFERSON DAVIS, in a recent letter, says his name will not be with his consent, included among the candidates for United States Senator from Mississippi.

THE Massachusetts Republican State convention was held at Worcester on the 19th. Alexander H. Bullock was chosen permanent Chairman. John D. Long was nominated for governor; Henry Mason Lee, Lieutenant-governor; George Marston for Attorney General; C. H. Judd for Auditor; H. B. Pierce for Secretary of State; E. Holbrook for Treasurer and Receiver. The resolutions adopted affirm the doctrine that the Democratic party, if restored to power, would, if possible, unite local self-government on all questions of vital bearing to the States must be fully recognized, the National Government restricted strictly to its statutes, from whom it derives allegiance, complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of their civil and political rights; charge the Democratic party with having undertaken to revive sectional animosity for the purpose of securing political advantages by heartless sectionalism; that the paper and coin circulation of the country shall at all times be maintained at par with the gold standard of the commercial world; approve the action and public utterances of President Hayes in maintaining the constitutional prerogatives of the Executive, and in encouraging and successfully resisting all efforts of a Democratic Congress to cripple the functions of the Government; favor, etc.

THE Virginia State Republican Convention met at Lynchburg on the 20th and nominated James G. Jenkins of Milwaukee, as their candidate for governor, Mr. Alexander Mitchell, deceased. Mr. Jenkins accepts.

THE Colorado State Republican Convention met at Denver on the 20th and nominated William P. Boss for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court in the room made vacant by the resignation of Judge Bradford, and filled this year. The platform was an exceptionally brief one, and touches lightly on National matters, but advocates strongly the resumption and unlimited coinage of silver. The renomination of Grant was also favored and a promise recorded to give him the Electoral vote of the State if he is a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

A REPORTER of the Washington Post of the 21st claims to have had an interview with Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague at her home in that city, and represents her as declaring it to be her intention to remain in Washington with her children, whereshe "can be quiet and wait until her wrongs are righted." She says she has been charged with all manner of misdoings of which she is entirely innocent.

EX-PRESIDENT GRANT and party arrived at San Francisco on the steamer City of Tokio, on the afternoon of the 20th, and met with a grand and enthusiastic reception at the hands of the thousands of the waiting people who had assembled to do honor to the occasion. At night the streets were illuminated by electric lights and the distinguished guests were escorted to their rooms in the Palace Hotel, accompanied by an immense concourse of people. The Mayor delivered a welcoming address, to which the ex-President made a brief response.

The Southern Plague.

THERE was one new case of yellow fever reported in New Orleans on the 16th, the patient being a young man lately from Morgan City.

A DESPATCH was received at Cairo, Ill., on the 16th to the effect that there were eight cases of yellow fever at Concordia, Miss. Quarantine against the latter place had been established by the surrounding neighborhood.

THE number of new cases reported in Memphis on the 16th was twenty-three (twelve colored); deaths, nine. Several cases had recently developed in the city limits, thus indicating the gradual spreading of the disease to the surrounding country.

THE Tennessee Board of Health decided on the 16th in favor of the rule pro hibiting the interment of colored children with the Caucasian dead during, and for a period after the epidemic should decline, and likewise to avoid the crowding necessarily incidental to the interment of colored children with the country, and keeping of the funeral services separate and distinct. The yellow fever season is entirely guarded and called to an end by the frost.

TODAY'S new cases were reported at Concordia on the 19th (colored).

ON the evening of the 17th S. W. Johnson, of Columbus, Ohio, was killed dead in the street while walking in Memphis. Before leaving home Johnson, a prominent citizen, received a telegram announcing the serious illness of a son in Memphis. He left on the first train, and on reaching the city was informed that the boy was dead. Johnson, on hearing the news, fell dead.

ON the 18th Memphis established its quarantine regulations against New Orleans, Vicksburg and Grenada. Persons coming from these cities will not be allowed to enter the city, and all persons leaving Memphis will be required to remain in quarantine for five days.

THERE were eleven new cases (nine white) and four deaths reported to Memphis on the 19th.

DESPITE excitement existed at Holly Springs, Miss., on the 19th, over a case of yellow fever there, the victim being a man named Arthur Hicks, who had recently returned from a voyage.

FOUR new cases and one death were reported at Concordia, Miss., on the 20th.

SEVEN new cases and one mortuary were reported to Memphis on the 20th, and eight less cases and one death on the 21st. The total number of cases reported during the week was about equal to last week, and the deaths during the week, thirty-seven, are to date, 580. A warning to absentees was issued by the Board of Health, stating that, though the number of new cases of yellow fever is small, it would not be safe for those who had not had the disease to return yet. The comparatively small number of new cases and deaths was thought to be due to the fact that there were so few people about persons to the city.

Foreign.

ACCORDING to a London telegram of the 15th a treaty had been signed between China and Russia, by the terms of which the latter had agreed to evacuate the Kuldja territory four years, and the former to pay an indemnity of 5,000,000 roubles. Russia also reserved a strip of territory for a military road to Kuldja.

ON the 15th General Sickles visited Paris with the view of organizing a Franco-American Commission, under the Presidency of General Grant, to make a definite choice between the Panama and Nicaragua Canal schemes.

A GLASGOW dispatch of the 15th says that 40,000 Scotch farmers had been thrown out during the preceding few days because of the unwillingness of the owners to accede to the demands of the workmen for an increase of pay.

AT Ashton, Eng., 3,000 cotton operatives were on a strike for higher wages.

ON the 16th Cuttle's large distillery at Bromley, Eng., was burned to the ground. Loss $2,000,000.

ONE of the by-guests of Major Cavagnari was killed at Simla on the 16th. The facts of the late massacre as detailed by him do not differ materially from the reports already received. Major Cavagnari and the most of his associates are certainly dead, but Mr Jenkyns, the assistant, was alive when the soldier left.

ACCORDING to a Cape Town (South African) dispatch, published in London on the 16th, Cetewayo, the Zulu King, had been captured. It was thought this would end the campaign.

KING JOHN, of Abyssinia, has written to the British Foreign Office complaining that General Kirkham, an English officer in his service, had been poisoned at Massowah, while on his way to England with a present from Queen Victoria. He demands that the murderer be punished, because he had the privilege of a British subject. The Foreign Office has pronounced it a serious case of outrage here.

THE Chairman of the Committee on Strikes of the Bradford (Eng.) Conference has asked for the United States to arrange for the emigration of 250,000 persons.

An Old Theme.

If a boy is constantly whittling sticks, loud parents say he has a "mania for constructive ability," or if he whittles about two inches and an air correctly, "he will be a great musician," or if he whittles with reasonable accuracy, "that child is a born artist." If the presumed or assumed evidences of genius are noted upon, and those in authority upon the subject agree with the young man and force him into a trade or art, on the ground of their being better able to judge than he is for himself, the possibility, nay, the probability, is that he will turn out a Harold Scamp-gole, of whose class the world has far too many already. He sketches a little, tinkers a little with tools, drums a little on the piano, and in time falls into line with the rank and file of the mediocrity of incompetents and peddlers of jute. He may protest with all his strength in his earlier years that he is not fitted for the occupation chosen for him, he may denounce it, he may turn into some other calling that his soul hungers after, it is all in vain. If some man is born, he has an inherent right and especial license to follow that calling which he feels he was born to follow, and through it to develop himself. He is a law unto himself, and no man has a right to say him

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—A school house recently erected in Southwood borough is in three counties. It is placed partly on the corner of Marion, Schley and Taylor Counties.

—A writer in the "Independent" puts in a plea for "red raspberry wine at the communion table." "Can it be?" he asks. "What that which sends souls to hell is a proper emblem of the blood of Christ?

—The Newspaper recommends that the Church Choir-singers who sing in "Paradise to grow an indelible line bought and that their places be supplied by those who do not receive the Church patronage.

—The Congregational Conference report 1,000 conversions and 40 ordinations; membership 57,000, and an increase for the year of 1,700. They have thirty-six churches, forty-two local preachers, and 2,700 Sunday-School children.

—A society for the promotion of Scriptural instruction among the Irish-speaking population of Ireland had an income last year of $23,149. At its recent annual meeting the chairman, Lord Plunkett, Bishop of Meath, said that there are 1,000 Scripture readers in the country, 700 schools, and 100 could be taught English.

—Methodism is now represented in Burmah by nineteen missionaries. Besides these there are occasional visits from the Bengal field. Some time ago the Methodist Society in Calcutta sent a deputation to visit the Karens in Tavoy, and the deputation came by Rangoon and Bassein, and got joined the Baptists there. The Rev. R. F. Carver is the Methodist missionary, and has established himself in Rangoon. He has purchased their chapel at his disposal, and a series of meetings were held, at which seven persons professed their faith. Dr. Bodmin and Mr. Goodwin, from India, assisted, and at the end of their visit of two weeks a church of fifty members and probationers was organized and ground for a church building secured.—N. Y. Independent.

—Ethnic authorities state that the remains of the Apostles of Christ are now in the following places: Saints are in Rome; Peter, Paul, Andrew, James the Less; Jude, Bartholomew, Mathias and Simon. Three are in the Kingdom of Naples: Matthew at Salerno, Andrew at Amalfi, and Thomas at Ortona. One is in Spain, James the Greater, whose remains are at St. Jago de Compostella. Of the body of St. John the Evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no known relic. The Emperor Otto Magnus and Luke are also in Italy, the former at Venice, and the latter at Padua. St. Paul's remains are now believed to be in Spain. Some of the relics of the Church at Rome which is called after him, as are also those of Simon and Jude, those of James the Lesser and of Philip are in the Church of the Holy Apostles. Bartholomew's in the church on the Island in one Liber called after him, while Mathias' are in the Santa Maria Maggiore, under the great altar of the new papal basilica.

—The Count de Paris, who is a German newspaper tells of an interesting instance of conversion from the Orthodox Greek Church to Mohammedanism recently witnessed by him in Constantinople. The convert was Jorgaki Bey Arnautzi, an official in the service of the Porte, under the title of Adjutant to the Sultan. It is amid custom that, in such cases, apostates from one form of the religious denomination which they convert is abandoning should be in attendance at his initiation into the new faith, and should endeavor, up to the last moment to persuade him to renounce his resolution. In this instance this duty was assumed by a brother of the apostate, who is a man of high position and great influence in the Greek Church, and who, with tears and entreaties, labored earnestly, though in vain. Jorgaki Bey remained unmoved, replying: "I hope and pray that you, too, may come to perceive the truth of Islam, and may chose your days as a Mohammedan." Once sixty Bey is the same proud to the convert. The reconvenience has been made the text by the Turkish press for long homilies on the superiority of Mohammedanism to all other religions as a means of salvation.

The Use of Opium.

It has often been stated and may now be safely said as a fact, that the consumption of opium in its various forms, and some other narcotic drugs, is keeping pace with the increase in the United States as well as in England. If it be possible to find a more destructive thing or than liquor it is opium, the use of which may be concealed for years, and although its victim accesses the doom by degrees his nearest and most intimate friends may not for a while suspect that he is a slave to the habit. It does not bloat the face, as does alcohol, nor does it prevent the attendance of business which compels the drunkard to abstain during a certain portion of the day, or else run the risk of losing the situation. It can be easily carried in the waistcoat pocket to the place of business, and if forgotten the nearest drug store will supply freely the quantity needed for the day. The consumer is wonderfully cunning, and to prevent suspicion being aroused will go from one drug store to another so that the proprietors may not suspect him to be a confirmed opium user. It is generally the case that the victim has begun the use of opiates to relieve pain, probably under medical direction. Relief and relief being secured, its use has been continued and its victim at last finds himself unable to sleep without it. Many also are driven to its use by alcoholic liquors which in all stages of delirium tremens cause such nervous excitement as to prevent sleep. Instead of trusting themselves by a treacherous peace-

The Cincinnati Liberal Convention.

The National Convention of Liberal Leaguers called to meet at Cincinnati is called to that city on the 13th and elected Elizur Wright, President of the League, Chairman. After addresses by Mr. Wright and others resolutions were reported to be acted upon the next day. The President of the League was authorized to call a National Convention at his discretion to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President in 1880.

The meeting on the 14th was largely attended, and, after an address by Mr. Underhill, the following resolution, offered by him, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the deepest and most vital question of the day to be the question of how to secure to all the people the greatest amount of happiness, and that we believe that the best means for securing this end has been inaugurated and is now originating in the call of a convention, when in unity and in fact, to be assembled to-day, the success of the principles of this country.

A resolution was then offered and adopted that the National Liberal League affiliate with all liberal bodies.

At the afternoon session General Morton, of New Haven, Conn., was elected President of the Convention into which the Liberal League had been resolved itself, after a few addresses expressing pleasure at the union of the two bodies, a committee on Resolutions was appointed. The following platform was subsequently reported and adopted:

The delegates to the Convention of the National Liberal League, assembled on the 13th day of September, 1879, recommend and adopt the following declaration of principles as a platform to be considered as the basis of the organization of their convention for the purpose of preparing a general expression of principles and a line of policy preparatory to their formal convention and nomination of candidates for the year 1880, and in the meantime it is left to the Executive Committee to appoint the time and place for such action in regard to the full realization of the objects for which the League was formed, and to the best interests of the Liberal party.

The members then withdrew and the Union of the National Liberal Party.

On Friday, The National Liberal League has advised the Liberals of our country to unite in effort on a platform of the principles of human declaration and platform to-day.

On Saturday, the general press and members of the National Liberal party is to receive some facts that have never yet been made the recognized of a movement by the people as expressed in the declaration of independence and the guarantee to the constitution of the United States. That it must be made as clear as far as possible in our country, that all persons shall be equal in their rights and must and be endowed with certain rights, among which shall be secured the right to the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these objects in the broadest sense in our judgment, that a new party must be formed and organized in the United States and State governments, so as to prevent or abolish all religious and sectarian influences in our legislative and executive and not possibly. That, as the fundamental principle of the Liberal party, we adopt and refer to the noble motive of the declaration of independence, that all men are the bright constitution that had let our fathers to the principle of liberty that is a matter of fact which we believe should be our motive ever since the days when the National Liberal party is now called, nearly and not exactly, but as near as we can get it, as possible,

MCCABE BROS. will move their building across the street and build an addition to it this fall.

S. M. SEE, of this place has taken a contract to build a school house in the town of Hayes.

MRS. O'DONNELL, a native of Ireland, died a short time ago at Beaver Island aged 100 years.

HIRAM CARTER, of Norwood, will remove his shoe shop to this place next week, or the week after.

WE intend getting out around to see our farmer friends some this fall. Raked potatoes and bitter beaten.

STOCKMAN will erect a fine new brick store on the south east corner of Bridge and Clinton streets next spring.

CAPT. DICK WILLIAMS has erected him self a small but neat residence on the corner of State and Mason Streets.

THE order supper and festival at Boyne which was held Friday by the Baptist Ladies Aid Society, was a big success.

MAJOR GRAHAM returned Saturday from Toledo, Ohio, where he has been attending the gathering of Prisoners of War.

MARRIED—In Petoskey on the 30th, by Rev. Mr. Potter, Mr. W. P. Empey to Mrs. E. F. Bradbertan, both of South Arm.

REPAIRS on the south approach to the bridge in the village, are in progress, and travel across the bridge is temporarily suspended.

THE old linseed building on Bridge street is being transformed into a neat store building, under the skillful hands of A. J. Mudge.

THE grevious want of a flouring-mill still exists in Charlevoix. No better point for such an investment can be found in Michigan.

WE regret to learn that death has taken the first born of Chas. Dixon, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a son of Hon. J. S. Dixon, of this place.

EDWIN LAVANWAY, who was sent to State Prison from Antrim county about a year ago, died in the prison on the 22d of this month.

CAPTAIN WALTER CLIFFORD, and his company, stationed at Fort Snelling, has been ordered to the scene of the recent Indian massacre in Colorado.

THE SENTINEL office is receiving job material which enables us to do all kinds of programme, hand bill and poster work in good style and at low prices.

NEW POST OFFICE.—A new Post Office has been established in the Township of Norwood on the Charlevoix and Elk Rapids route, to be called Inwood, in honor of our esteemed and venerable fellow citizen of that name, who owns a farm in that Township. Green Hilton is the Postmaster.

THERE is no law excluding postal cards from the mails because of matter of indelicateness being printed or written thereon, but no indecent language, terms or epithets will be allowed in such cases.

WE regret very much that the crowded state of our columns last week compelled us to omit quite a number of items sent us. Now we have plenty of room, and we invite our friends to send us in the news.

EATON.—We "mixed up" the proceedings of Circuit Court last week. In the case of Nye vs. Isaman,—Eaton for plaintiff and Green for defendant,—a verdict for plaintiff was rendered. The case of Stauffer vs. Strand was continued.

THE Big Rapids Pioneer Magnet is out this early for Hon. John T. Rich, of Lapeer, for our next Governor. Mr. Rich is the present speaker of the Michigan House of Representatives, a man of ability, integrity, and a farmer. He would undoubtedly make a strong candidate.

THE Presbyterian society at Boyne Falls is erecting a neat and commodious chapel which, from present indications, will be completed this fall.

REV. MR. Redpath, their pastor, is also erecting a comfortable residence, which is well on toward completion.

NEW FIRM.—W. F. Empey, of South Arm, has associated himself with Mr. R. S. Hubbard, of Indiana, and the firm are opening out in big style at Empey's old stand at South Arm. A $6,000 stock of goods passed through here last week for them, and Empey has had his store fitted up in good style to receive them. They are both business men, and can't help doing a splendid business at their stand.

A body of troops marching to relieve the Ute Indian agency in Colorado, were surprised by hostile Ute Indians on the 29th, and Major M. T. Thornburg and thirteen soldiers slaughtered, and three officers and thirty-five soldiers wounded. Gen. Merritt, with a large force of infantry and cavalry has been ordered to the relief of the besieged command, which is entrenched. Six companies from Fort Snelling har been ordered to join the reinforcements.

A serious accident occurred on Tuesday last on board the "City of Grand Rapids" at Petoskey. The unfortunate man (a deck hand) was standing in the gang-way of the vessel while a heavy sea brought the steamer suddenly against the dock. The man was caught between one of the large piles and the vessel, crushing his head and body so that the blood gushed a stream from his mouth and nose. It was thought for some time that he could not live, but we understand he is recovering.

We presume there are many in our village who are oblivious to the fact that within less than a mile of our town a farm can be found that has the semblance of having been transported from some old agricultural region. A visit to the farm of Hon. John S. Dixon, just outside the corporation, always carries us out of the woods, as it were, and gives us a foretaste of what this entire country is to be fifteen years hence. No stumps mar the green surface of the meadows, and board fences are in the ascendancy. A fine farm residence, and good barns and granaries adorn the place, and thrift marks everything. Mr. Dixon has a growing orchard of over 500 trees, about 200 of which are bearing. The farm, situated as it is, at the foot of Pine lake and so near the village, is a valuable one, and certainly a pleasant home for the declining years of the venerable owners.

—The steamer Nellie Booth is laid up for the present owing to a break in her machinery. She will be on the rout again this week.

THERE is another school law passed in 1877 about which it might be well to inquire whether it is generally obeyed or not. It requires that the officers authorized to examine applicants for license to teach shall collect from each male receiving a certificate a fee of one dollar, and from each female receiving a certificate a fee of fifty cents. Also that all such fees shall be paid over to the County Treasurer on or before the first day of January, April, July and October in each year accompanied by a list of the persons to whom certificates are granted, such money to be set apart and used as a teachers institute fund. The question has been raised whether or not these fees are in all cases collected and paid over as required by law. An investigation at the County Treasurer's office, in connection with information as to the whole number of teachers licensed in the county would be necessary to determine that matter.

THE ROSS FARM.—Six miles ride north [illegible] village on the Clam Road, is situated as pleasant and well improved farm as any country of our years can boast of. On Friday, in company with Rev. Mr. Ott, we drove out and captured Mr. Ross at the clattering mill, and Mrs. Ross and her daughters at the carpet rags, and remaining during the afternoon, and to tea, enjoying the good things of the farmer's board—the inimitable baked potatoes and sweet butter in particular. Oh, would we were a farmer! Mr. Ross has about 80 acres under improvement, and has a five year old orchard—mostly bearing,—which is food for the eyes, is regularly in it laid out, and so uniform in the size and shape of its trees. Mr. Ross has the best of stock, and is one of the kind of farmers which are a credit to a section of country. We left for our home and sustain in the dark of the evening, with our noses may filled with substantials, our pockets with apples, and our hands with clusters of fruit specimens.

A GREAT BOOK.—Hubbard Bros. the great book publishers have just issued from the press a new volume entitled "Headley's Life and Travels of General Grant." It is a brilliant record of his remarkable career from his boyhood to the completion of his extraordinary journey around the world the guests of Queens and Emperors, and the honored of all nations. A perusal of this valuable book will enable the reader to follow the eminent man in his journey, and to pass through doors which to other travelers have ever remained closed.

It is believed that it will be found more deeply interesting and instructive than any similar volume that has ever been published, both from the fact that no other American was ever before so welcomed to royal courts as Grant. The author is Hon. J. T. Headley, formerly secretary of State of New York. It is superbly bound, and embellished with over 200 engravings. Every family in Charlevoix County should have this book. S. Snyder, of this place has the agency, and will canvas the county.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

GEN. GRANT!

His Joyous Reception in San Francisco.

The People of the West Want Him in the White House.

After the manifold honors with which America's great warrior-statesman has been crowned in foreign countries, he returns to his native land to be received as no American has ever been received. All this joyousness means more than some would have it. It means that the "Star-spangled banner" has not diminished but continues like a mighty river to flow on—silent a mastiness, but deep and irresistable—again with a rumble that is but the vent of public sentiment. The SENTINEL believes Gen. Grant to be the coming man!

A leading citizen of Washington who has been West and has lately interviewed by a Chicago Tribune reporter, and the following is the interview:

"What political straws did you discover, Major, in connection with the demonstration and matters growing out of it?"

"The newly-elected Governor, Perkins, Senators Jones and Sharon, and the other prominent men out that way, are determinedly in favor of Gen. Grant for the next President, and do not hesitate to express their convictions on the subject. Congressmen Davis and Page, the two Republican members just elected to doubtful districts, are enthusiastic on the subject."

"From your observations of matters and things on the Coast, what do you think California, Oregon, and Nevada will do in the next National Convention?"

"In California, of course, the leader is Governor-elect Perkins. Senator Booth, ex-Senator Cole and Page and Davis, the new Congressmen, are outspoken for Grant, and their influence will be felt in the next Convention. All the prominent Republicans in Oregon, including ex-Senator Corbett, Sim Reed, and others, are enthusiastic in their determination to send a united delegation to the Convention for Grant. Several of them remarked to me lately that they didn't care whether he were going to send delegates to nominate him any how. The leading men of Nevada—Mackey, Fair, Sharon, Hayward, and others—do not hesitate to tell any one that the Nevada delegation will go solid for Grant."

"What are the sentiments of the people generally?"

"The Chairman of the Republican executive committee of San Francisco says that the leaders of the party in Frisco boast ninety-eight men out of 100 of the Republican party of California are for Grant, and claim that a number of the Workingmen's party, one-third, in fact, would also support him."

"Did you feel the public pulse as you journeyed eastward?"

"I had abundant opportunities to hear expressions of opinion on this subject. I met Senator Saunders and Congressman Valentine on the way to Omaha and quite a number of Nebraskans and Iowans, both of Omaha and Council Bluffs, who wanted to know all about the demonstration, and found they were just as enthusiastic over Grant as were the people I had just left out on the slope, and just as ready to give him a rousing reception on his way here. I don't converse with a Republican in either of those places who didn't express his preferences for Grant, nor a Democrat who didn't acknowledge that he would be the hardest man to beat. The boom, as you call it here, has certainly struck Nebraska, Iowa, and the various portions of Illinois through which I came."

"What do you think about his accepting or rejecting a nomination?"

"I most certainly think he would accept it."

"On what do you base the conviction,—on anything that may have been said by him or his most intimate friends since his return?"

"No."

"On what, then?"

"I think as I do for the reason that in one of his renowned letters he once expressed the sentiment that the will of the people was the law of the land; and I know that he regards the vote of a Republican National Convention as an expression of the will of the people; and so, if he is nominated he must accept, in my humble mind, and go as heartily into the canvas to win as he ever did on the field of battle."

"What do you think is his personal preference in this matter?"

"To remain in private life. He has seen all the glory and honor that any American citizen has ever had, although you must remember that there is one round in the ladder of fame which neither he nor any other man has as yet climbed, and that is to be President a third time. And though he has seen the highest honors showered upon him, yet what I have seen of him, both before and while he was President, leads me to believe that he has as much ambition and ambition for fame and name as any other Yankee can."

GRANT.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The career of GEN. GRANT continues a brilliant, fascinating chapter in the romance of history. From the obscurity of private life, as successful, popular executive in a village in Northern Illinois, he rose, step by step, to the proud position of commander of all the armies of the Republic, to the Presidency, and to the Presidency again, from the modest victory of Fort Henry to the grand climax of Appomattox; from being the receipient of the grateful homage of American people to stand in the eye of the world the object of the respect and admiration of the peoples of all the nations of the earth. Sprung from the New England Puritan stock of the seventeenth century, he seems to have inherited its sternness of purpose and its indifference to flattery,—its admirable poise. As his tour round the world is unprecedented in the annals of history so his deportment appears to have been unexampled in its freedom from the least alloy of vanity. Surprised by a magnificent ovation in the harbor of San Francisco, he embraces his old classmate and fellow-soldier, Gen. McDowell, in the presence of an eager multitude, with the warmth and abandon of a boy. A hundred ovations from the rulers and peoples of the Old World, stretching from England to Japan, seem not to have lifted him a hair's breath in his own estimation. It is as impossible to "turn his head" as it was during the Rebellion to turn the flank of one of his armies. The ataations showered upon him abroad have been gratefully received and acknowledged as marks of honor to his country, but personally regarded only as pleasing incidents of a journey undertaken with a purpose,—the purpose of seeing the Old World and studying mankind, their habits, social customs, and political institutions. From this purpose he was no more to be swerved by the blandishments of power than by the dictates of a false generosity before Fort Donelson in 1862, when, to Gen. Buckner's request for a commission to arrange terms of capitulation, he wrote: "No terms other than an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works." Obstinacy and modesty are not often combined in the same character. With obstinacy there is usually much self-assertion, as in the case of Andrew Jackson. It is also true that the armor of an obstinate character is not infrequently successfully assailed by flattery. But Gen. Grant is as impervious to flattery as he is free from the vice of self-assertion. The career of Gen. Grant is scarcely less marvelous and far more illustrious than that of Napoleon the First. But while with Napoleon it was: "I am the Star," with Grant it is, I was a humble instrument in the hands of the people. Napoleon's confidence in himself bordered closely on belief in his own infallibility. But Grant, in his letter accepting the second nomination to the Presidency, said humbly: "Experience may guide me in avoiding mistakes inevitable with novices in all professions and in all occupations." Such a confession is rare in a State paper; and it shows the courage of an integrity fearless of results. To an unsuspicious friend Gen. Grant once sent this message: "I am now convinced that I did you injustice. I regret it, and, if I ever have an opportunity, I will recompense you." In this characteristic of daring to confess an error, whether in a State paper or in a communication to a humble friend, Gen. Grant resembles Lincoln. The martyr President had no pride of opinion where public interest or private rite was involved; neither has Grant. This quality is by no means peculiar to all great men. It is found only in characters which, intrinsically grand, are rendered almost sublime by their simplicity. Writing of Grant in 1865, the New York World lauds this virtue as a military man:

"When the mass of men look upon such a character they may learn a truer respect for themselves and others; they are taught by it that high qualities and great abilities are consistent with the simplicity of taste, contempt for parade, and plainness of manners with which directness and earnest men have a strong natural sympathy. Grant, simple, unaffected among all the Generals who have served in this war in the completeness of his final results. . . . If anybody is so tortuous or so wrong-headed as to see nothing great in Gen. Grant beyond his marvelous tenacity of will, let that dualism explain, if he can, how it has happened that since Grant rose to high command this quality has always been exerted in conspicuous energy precisely at the point on which everything on its whole sphere of operations hinged. There has been no display of great qualities on small occasions; no expenditure of herculean effort to accomplish objects not of the first magnitude. It is only a very clear-sighted and comprehensive mind that could also . . . thus have had the whole emphasis of an unlimitable soul so precisely on the emphatic place."

Grant's series of reception beyond the oceans was the logical results of this excellent estimate of his character as developed chiefly in his military career. Let it be admitted that Grant's remarkable journey is merely evidence of the hero-worship to which mankind is so strongly addicted. Still it must be conceded that all the world does not unite to crown a man's brow without good cause. Napoleon ended his brilliant career miserably a prisoner at St. Helena. Said there by the fears and hates of all Europe, Grant having enjoyed the highest honor the Nation can bestow, returns from the triumphal tour around the world, to be made the recipient of a welcome as beauty, fraternal, and louder as the subdued cry of joy with which the father embraces his child returning from a long absence. In the presence of this grand demonstration, this spontaneous outpouring of patriotism and affection, partizanship is hushed, and the American people, as a unit, receive back to their bosom and confidence the beloved General who beat back the waves of rebellion and saved the Nation.

Missouri Germans resent the charge of Carl Schurz's mouth-piece at St. Louis, that the German Republicans are opposed to Grant, and they are making it lively for that interesting print.

The Christian Union, edited by Henry Ward Beecher and Lyman Abbott noticing the great reception given to Gen. Grant in California, remarks that Gen. Grant "is still the most popular man in America. The attacks upon the errors of his presidential administration have neith or tarnished nor diminished the luster of his name."

Grant and the Nation.

New York Tribune (Rep.)

No true citizen of this country wishes to see the schemes of revolutionists and nullifiers ripen into another war. If that time should come, there would be a call for U. S. Grant, which the country knows, he would not disregard. It is well that this plain citizen still lives among us, crowned with honors, ripened by experience, and elevated above party-strife by his refusal to be the candidate for office; for, if the war of factions should ever threaten to plunge the country into disorder, or if rebellion should again lift its head again, there is a man around whom the loyalty of the Nation would instinctively rally. The fact that he still lives and stands above the strife of parties, will make revolutionists think twice before they resist the laws or threaten the Nation's unity. It is the rare good fortune of the ex-President that he can thus render his country a daily and hourly service while enjoying well-earned freedom from the restraints of public station. In the attitude which he has chosen with respect to all offices and parties, his very life is a benefit to his country,—a powerful barrier against nullification, rebellion, or revolution in any form. For the world knows that a million of veterans would take down their muskets if he should draw his sword in defense of the Nation.

The iron market continues on the rise.

Senator Blaine and Representative Payne, of Maine, are now in Ohio, speaking for the Republican ticket.

Jeff. Davis has refused a $500 offer to write for a newspaper the reasons why he sent the rebel rabble into Pennsylvania in 1864.

The St. Clair Republican renews its recommendation of the Hon. F. G. D. Holden of Grand Rapids as the next Republican candidate for Governor. Oh, dear!

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, an emphatic Grant organ, thinks that it hears the still small voice of the Republican party saying to Mr. Carl Schurz that he must either join the boom or take the bounce.

No wonder the Democratic party hopes to win by the sledgism. The Democratic party itself resembles a sledgism. Tilden, as is well-known, furnishes the barrels; the solid south furnishes the powder and shot; the Confederate brigadiers furnish the stock; Thurman, Bayard, Hendricks, Tilden, Ben. Butler and Hancock all contribute toward the lock; and Jeff. Davis pulls the trigger which fires the party.

PENSION REPORT.

Interesting Statistics—A New Plan to Be Recommended for the Adjustment of Pension Claims—Claims Arising under the Arrears Act.

Since the passage of the Arrears-of-Pension act, 50,000 rejected claims have been reconsidered, and 30,000 original and unsettled claims is now 180,000. The number of claims received last week is 2,500, which doubles the numerical force the office can dispose of under the present system. The daily mail now averages 2,200 letters, while 1,200 letters are daily dispatched from the Bureau. The number of pensioners is about 235,000, the roll having increased 10,000 during the year, through settlement of claims of pensioners of the war of 1812.

Commissioner Bentley, in his annual report, will call attention to the defects of the present system of paying pensions, and will recommend the adoption of a new plan, which Secretary Schurz has indorsed in very strong language, and of which the following is an outline:

After the country shall have been properly districted, and the time and places where, and the manner in which pensions are to be paid established, will attend annually at the county-seat of each county, or such other point as the commissioner may designate, for the purpose of paying pensions. Public notice of the time and place must be given, and the practice of the agent in the matter of paying pensions will be specified by law. Pensioners will appear at

THE UPPER RIVER.

Prompt and United Action Necessary in the Matter of Opening It.

The people of the Lake region, who are so deeply interested in the opening of the channel between the Lakes are now to the front with the question itself and it must be met boldly and squarely or soon, with the means on hand which have been pledged to do the work, it finds no.

This week Corkin, Stuckney & Cogger dredge will complete the work on the lower river, and if the funds are not vio late at that time, they will leave, as other work is calling for them. We therefore call upon those who have the matter in charge at the several points around the lake to collect in the funds pledged, and forward them to Hon. John Nicholls in this village. Every cent of the said subscribed will be needed to do the work, and the necessity for doing it thoroughly and well now will suggest itself to every one. The dredging of a deep channel will be a little account if it is not properly secured at once.

Let the people bear in mind that there is very little likelihood of a dredge being here at this time next season, as the next session of Congress will continue up duly or later, and further appropriations have are always the last thing thought.

It is very important that this work is done now, and be done well.

Only three days more days' dredging on the lower channel.

TAX ON RAILROAD LANDS.—A Grand Rapids dispatch in the Post and Tribune says that Hon. W. Cass and Thomas A. Scott, trustees of the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land grant, have filed a bill in the United States court of that city to restrain the sale by Auditor General Latimer of lands belonging to said grant in Charlevoix, Emmet and Kalkaska counties for unpaid township and highway taxes, on the ground that the township officers, acting as "rings," "boss and the Ball," "Red, White and Blue," and "Bully Round the Flag," "Tattoo" was extended for Bugler Feeney, of the 14th Michigan Infantry, and thus abused the first day of Reunion, and by many said to have been the largest day of all their lives.

The forenoon of the second day was spent in a practical business meeting at the Opera House, when a permanent organization was effected.

In the afternoon there was a grand parade, with the Hon. Tom Ainsworth as Grand Marshal. The speech of the occasion was by Col. Stroebel, of the 24th Infantry, and was delivered from a stand in the commons, there being no business men enough to hold one quarter of the crowd.

After the speaking, the bugle sounded the "supper call," and the ex-prisoners were escorted to the hall, where a most magnificent supper was spread. The bright ware provided over by the many elegant ladies of Toledo. Your humble servant had the pleasure of occupying a table presided over by Miss Kate Young and Mrs. Quinn, two of the most refined and intelligent ladies in the State or this Of course their table was the grandest of all.

In the evening there were speeches, music, and Andersonville views. The most impressive speech of the evening was that of Gen. Garfield.

FIRE PROTECTION.—A call is out for a public meeting to be held this (Tuesday) evening at Town Hall, for the purpose of effecting an organization that may be of some service in case of fire in this village. Charlevoix has up to this time been fortunate in never having had a fire within her limits and as a result, our people are really asleep on the subject of that relentless destroyer—fire. Bridge street, especially the east side, is now so closely built that should a fire break out at either end, with a wind to set in conjunction with the flames, the street would be swept. The Village Council have taken up this matter, and enacted an ordinance, which appeared in our last issue, and appointed an officer whose duty it shall be to direct the means which shall be provided. After an organization is effected the proper means will be provided for some sort of apparatus.

Prisoners of War Reunion

[illegible]

In consultation with your reporter for [illegible] a brief statement of the proceedings of the grand reunion of the Ex-Prisoners of War, which was held in Toledo on the 2nd and second days of said reunion, the following, viz:

The meeting, which was the first of Ex-Prisoners of War ever held in the West had for its principal object that of adding to old prison friends and many comrades opportunity of coming together once more for a general social two days after a separation of over fourteen years.

On our arrival at Toledo we were met at the depot by a delegation of resident ex-Prisoners [illegible] among whom were Capt. Goulding, well known to all of the readers of the SENTINEL as the gentleman who lectures here on Longfellow's "Andersonville articles," which were published in the Toledo Blade) and escorted to the "Bethel," the prison-party hotel quarters, which was most magnificently and gaudily decorated and beautified by the many evergreens, while festoons of red, white and blue cloth were gracefully draped from corner to corner. Here our ex-Prisoner hall by name, such as the date of capture, Company, Regiment and present residence, registered. No well [illegible] could have been more cordial. No such greetings were ever before witnessed as the old prison survivors grasped hands and locked into each others faces beaming with pleasure at the sight of old prison comrades. Each ex-Prisoner was provided with a badge and cockade in the color, and No. of Michigan.

AN INDIAN AMBUSCADE.

Major Thoreau T. Thornburgh Killed and His Force Repulsed by the Utes, near Milk River; Interesting Particulars of the Fight; Fourteen Officers and Soldiers Killed and Several Others Wounded.

DENVER, October 1.

The following special dispatch was received at 4:30 this morning, and the terrible news is given to the world in a thrill of sorrow to every part of the West.

MILK RIVER AGENCY, October 1.

Thornburgh's command was attacked by Red Canyon at noon Tuesday, 29th inst., 25 miles from here, and was repulsed with heavy loss to the assailants.

Thornburgh was killed instantly during the retreat.

Captain Payne was wounded in two places, slightly.

Lieutenant Cherry and Captain Jordan were painfully wounded.

Two citizens as well as Wagonmaster Mc-Kinney were killed.

All the remaining officers and teamsters were wounded.

The command is now well entrenched, but is waiting to hear the issue of an appeal for reinforcements sent yesterday morning. Forty more troops are getting in at present. Reinforcements from Fort Steele are said to be on the way, and troops are coming from there and Rawlins to-day.

Captain Dodge has left Rawlins and Lieutenant Hall is in command of the troops there.

Captain Lawson and Lieutenant Cherry accompanied Agent Danker, and are now with the Indians.

Ouray is expected to arrive here to-day.

THOS. TAYNE, Commanding.

RAWLINS, WYO. T., October 1.

Major Thornburgh's expedition against the bands of the Indians, when within seventy miles of the Agency, joined Indian Agent Danker, and one troop and the Major sent Grafton Lowry, one of his scouts, to the Agency to communicate with Agent Danker, and see how matters stood. He found the utmost excitement and confusion prevailing. The Indians had sent all their old men, women and children south toward the Blue River. The warriors were drawn rated and painted in the usual war paint, and were about to murder Mr Meeker and fire the buildings, but were at a second time prevailed upon to desist. Lowry now attempted to return to the command, but was informed that he must remain; but, after giving them a number of assurances of his peaceable mission, he succeeded in departing. He was accompanied by about thirty warriors, who rode with him a number of miles, and then left him. Mr. Lowry arrived at the command, then near Milk Creek, on the evening of the 29th, and gave Major Thornburgh the above information. The next morning, September 29, the command advanced, under the guidance of Joe Rankin, who is well acquainted with the country. About nine o'clock a. m. Rankin discovered fresh Indian signs, and having arrived at a convon through which the road passed, and which would afford an excellent opportunity for ambush, led the command around over the hill, over on old trail well known to him. By this movement to save the lives of the command, for, on arriving on the top of the hill, he discovered the Indians in ambush on either side of the canyon through which the road passed.

Thornburgh formed his men in line, and awaited the coming attack. He was repeatedly urged to fire on the Indians, but persistently refused to do so, saying that his orders would not justify an attack. The Indians now rode up to within a hundred yards, dismounted, and, with a savage yell, fired, shooting Captain Payne through the arm. At this signal, the Indians gave a war-loop, and the battle commenced. Thornburgh now found that he was surrounded. He ordered a charge, which he gallantly led in person, and succeeded in cutting his way out, when within about 500 yards of his canon, he fell dead with two bullets through his brain. Captain Payne now took command, and the battle was carried on until eight o'clock p. m., the troops using the wagons and animals as breastworks. The Indians had kept a short distance and went into camp.

During the engagement Lowry was killed.

The casualties are about as follows:

Killed—Major Thornburgh, Lowry and fourteen enlisted men, the Wagon-Master McKinstry, and one teamster.

Wounded—Captain Payne, Captain Lawson, Surgeon Grimes, Lieutenants Paddock and Weir, and thirty-two men.

Major Thornburgh's body had not been recovered when Rankin left with the dispatches. Captain Payne had fortified his position, and thought he could possibly hold it until the arrival of reinforcements in case they were sent promptly.

About one hundred and fifty head of horses and mules were killed by the Indians.

DENVER, October 1.

The courier brought the news direct to Rawlins, and by three o'clock the intelligence had been flashed to the Omaha barracks, General Williams, in less than a quarter of an hour, was at work giving orders, consulting General Crook, who is in Chicago, and ordering matters forward. General Merritt, at Fort D. A. Russell, Cheyenne, was telegraphed to and ordered to the command of the expedition. The message was carried by the operator who received it at the latter place to the General at his headquarters, on horseback, at breakneck speed. General Merritt at once began preparing for the expedition. He is one of the best Indian fighters in the country, and his troops have accomplished wonderful things. At 11:45 o'clock this forenoon he telegraphed General Williams that he would be ready to start at four o'clock to-morrow morning with a force of nearly 400 men, and ammunition and provisions in plenty. A rapid march will be forced, and relief will soon reach the ones in peril.

Major Thornburgh's body, as first mentioned, has not been recovered, but lies in front of its command, and cannot be disputed.

He was a very powerful man, fully six feet two inches in height, active and muscular to a great extent, a magnificent shot, and a daring horseman. He had piercing black eyes, and wore a black beard in the English style, curly black hair, and was, withal, a handsome officer. He leaves a wife and two children (one other having recently died), who are at Fort Steele, whither the latter is to-day. Major Clark, journeyed it this morning.

"I Told You So!"

Did ever any one say to you after something had happened,

"I told you so"?

Married men affirm that their wives use that expression more constantly than any other; and, judging from what we have seen, there is no more than one man in five hundred who can keep his temper when his wife says

"I told you so."

A peculiar kind of emphasis is put on the words in that little sentence. It is quite effective. It doesn't amount to anything when a child says it—a child would think of getting indignant at it. It needs the velvet to bring out its meaning.

People there are in this world who have always told beforehand what was going to happen in their neighbors' affairs, or else they are consummate stupidities.

If Niagara Falls should start on an excursion tour to the moon somebody would say

"I told you so."

Why is it that foresight is so unblushingly claimed? Why do people who are sensible about most things, indulge in the folly of trying to make others think that they have some special knowledge with them? That they have the gift of second sight?

There seems to be a strong desire existing in the universal breast of the human family to prove themselves prophets—to be able to foretell what is to happen.

And the class of "I told you so" people is the very smallest form to which these kinds are found.

You have all heard the story of the cow and the turnips, but it will bear repeating, because it illustrates our subject so well.

"Wife," said a farmer, entering the house in great dismay, "our cow's choked with them turnips!"

"I told you so!" said his wife. "I knew she'd get choked with them turnips when I see you carry 'em out in the tray."

"But it wasn't the turnips altogether either," muttered the husband.

"There!" said his wife, triumphantly, "I told you so! I always said that cow would swallow that tray."

There is an immense satisfaction in being able to say, "I told you so," under certain circumstances.

When Mr. A.'s wife starts out on a promenade, and Mr. A. insists upon it that it is going to rain, and Mrs. A. declares it is a great deal he knows about it," and points at the blue sky in the east, and asks him if he thinks of setting up for an almanac-maker, doesn't he enjoy it when, an hour later, she comes home in a pouring rain, with her dress draggled and her hair straight as a cat-tail, and the feathers on her hat soaked to a mere string?

Doesn't he put an emphasis on the "I told you so," with which he greets her? He is a happy man for a little while, and there is no use in saying that he is not.

No accident ever happened to anybody without someone's saying to some other one:

"I told you so!"

Have you lost money, or won it? Somebody has told you so. Are you sick, or well? Somebody has prophesied it. Has your horse kicked the fender out of the wagon? Has your darling got the rabies? Has your life insurance company collapsed, and has made it no object for you to die? Has your baby got the measles? Has your wife run away with another man?—some of your friends have said:

"I told you so!" Kate Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

AMONG the consequences of the Glasgow bank failure has been a breach of promise case. The lady belongs to Glasgow, the gentleman to Greenock, both of them being people of some wealth. The lady held some of the stock of the bank, and when the crash came, although the marriage invitations had actually been issued, the gentleman cried off until it was ascertained how far he would be affected as her husband. After the decision of the House of Lords that no liability would extend to him, it was expected that he would at once complete his engagement, but for some reason or other he had changed his mind, and positively refused to do so. After all investigation had failed an action claiming £5,000 was raised, which he compromised by paying £1,000.

A FAIR-GROUND HORROR.

Terrible Disaster at Adrian, Mich.—A Grand Stand Containing Two Thousand People Suddenly Gives Way; Six Persons Killed and Several Others Fatally Injured.

ADRIAN, Mich., October 2.

This was the great day of the Lenawaee County Fair. The weather was all that could have been desired, and the city was early crowded with a greater number of visitors than ever assembled here before. This afternoon at three o'clock the grounds were a perfect jam, and the grand stand, now in session, was packed with people to witness the exercises on the track. A class of gentlemen's driving horses, double teams, had just been sent around the track, and the band, occupying the front and center of the grand stand, had just begun to play, while the judges were affixing premium ribbons, when, with a terrible crash, the stand broke down. It gave way first in the center, then the front fell outward to the track, and the rear fell into the river. At once ensued a scene of indescribable confusion. Buggies were overturned, horses dashed frantically up the track, seeking to shed a crowd of people flocking to the scene of the disaster. Those who were only slightly injured came crawling out of the mass of ruins, showing numerous contusions, and then began the work of dragging from the debris those who were more severely injured. There were in the neighborhood of 2,000 people on the grand stand, and a large crowd were in the space beneath. Like all such exhibitions, it draws a howling hoodlaing, drunken, profane crowd of heartless roughs, eager to see a fight, or a horsewhipping with the sun. A man, who applaued or jeer, encourage or interfere, with the ringing thumps as they drag themselves from beneath the benches as they have let their money in the pool-rooms on this one or that one. All that will be decided by this fourth is that the legs, stomach, liver and lights of the winner are not so badly used up as those of the rest of the gang. So far as the affair has any influence upon health, that influence is of the most pernicious sort. No man can abuse himself more than he has been doing and without paying a terrible penalty for it. Every one of them will emerge from the ordeal weaker than he was before, shattered in constitution, and with the seeds of disease sown in his system. To witness such a spectacle as this, thousands of ordinary men have squandered to enrich a few gamblers.

more enough to have materially reduced the number of the suffering poor in New York, and to have made many a wretched home comfortable. There is no manner of question but that what may have been a very important factor, unusually, the heat which made it very painful to be compelled to remain indoors in the close, stifling atmosphere of the usual scenes of housekeeping. Now it is very easy to escape this penalty. Let us have annual plants blossom in the house during the winter, one thing and another, and a change of climate to a very powerful degree, produced during the effect of a second or additional season. Doctors always suppress the opinion that, in the absence of any perceptible marks of atmospheric or aqueous excite action on the mucous, it is at present impossible to say that any idea of its relative age, or at what period its heat may have been most abundantly developed; but if the mucous effluvia which once prevailed in northern latitudes could be referred to this cause, it might afford some clue to the difficulty. Something, too, might be done in comparing the various changes of climate which have taken place in certain parts of the earth's surface, as indicated by geological evidence, with the actual human curse.

THE Buffalo Commercial Advertiser gives the following illustration of the rapid improvement in business: "A manufactory in the city of Buffalo, considerable soft child pig-iron having nearly exhausted a supply laid in some months ago at $17 50 per ton, received advices about three weeks ago from the furnace that the market was advancing, and advancing. The iron that had previously been purchased at $17 50 was quoted at $23 a ton. Thinking that the buoyant condition of the market was temporary, the communication was not promptly answered. When it was, the best furnace which a large order could be filled were asked for. The reply was '$21 50.' Another letter was promptly forwarded inquiring when the iron could be delivered. To this the following reply was received: 'Not until next month at $25, only two cars on hand. Prices expect to change before your order is received.'"

I HAVE frequently protested against the London butchers buying American meat and selling it as English meat and at English prices. I am told on very good authority that there are not three butchers in the West End who do not practice this deceit. But it would appear that the butchers are not alone in fault. I understand that a considerable portion of the beef that arrives from America at Liverpool is sent up to Scotland, and from there sent to the metropolis as Scotch beef. All this arises from the folly of the consumers, who, instead of insisting on their butchers selling them American beef at its legitimate price, turn up their noses at the excellent meat and then smack their lips over it when it is termed English, and paid for as English.—*Cor. ASTRONOMERS find that the anomalistic year is twenty-five minutes longer than the tropical year, on account of the precession of the equinoxes. The only way to remedy that is to stop the precession.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Pursuing his recent researches on the constitution of the stars, M. Monotigny shows, in a note to the Belgian academy, that the following conclusion may be accepted: In the twinkle of the stars which show the colored rays, when the blue tint predominates, or is found to be in excess, rain may be expected, if it has not already come. The more predominant the blue the greater the probability that the rain will be persistent and plentiful. It is supposed that the predominance of the blue is owing to the absorption of other colors in passing through moist layers of the atmosphere. On the same principle the blue tint of distant mountains indicates rain.

—In Rouen there are the most varied contrivances for the preservation of their organs against the attacks of animals of all kinds. In summer we find the result obtained by the exercise of the instinct substances, such as alkaloids, oxides and ethereal oils. It is remarkable that as the bedchambers should have a dislike for flowers. Anyone may observe how carefully cattle and sheep avoid plucking most of the flowers which abound in their pastures. The beauty of the flower, have I ventured to think, the vividness of their colors seem only to repel them. It is only when the flowers are fresh that they are thus carefully avoided by animals. When they wither and decompose and they are about to die they become eagerly sought after. We think this is the proper time to select corn and potatoes for next year's planting.—Iscrid, in Chicago Tribune.

—Many sugar-growers think it is necessary to use chemicals, compounds or solutions of some kind or other to destroy the germs in order to make sure of a crop. This is a great mistake. Their presence is no more necessary than is invariably a sign that death would occur within twenty-four hours. In some cases, when only one eye is wide open, while the other remains normal, death will not follow quite so rapidly, but it does take place in a week or so. It is both of the eyes are closed when the eyes are wide open, but when, as is generally the case, the eyes are half closed and only exposed from time to time, it will be advisable to call the attention of the patient or some poet or light-hearted to the change. Still another sign is when the pupils are small. A lowering of the vitality of approaching dissolution, and marrises it to some deceased state of decomposition.—Rural World.

—Professor Davies thinks that, in considering the climatic changes which have evidently taken place on various parts of the earth's surface, physicists have strangely left out of calculation what may have been a very important factor, unusually, the heat which made it very painful to be compelled to remain indoors in the close, stifling atmosphere of the usual scenes of housekeeping. Now it is very easy to escape this penalty. Let us have annual plants blossom in the house during the winter, one thing and another, and a change of climate to a very powerful degree, produced during the effect of a second or additional season. Serve on platter, garnish with parsley.—Cincinnati Times.

—The flood took boys down on Intervale road for the collection of seed. It says that "Every seed brings forth after its kind," or words to that effect. We ought always to plant potatoes. If we plant small potatoes we may reasonably expect to harvest the same kind, and so of everything. We might plant something because the cultivation of everything be cheap. Farmers need to plow their wheat under in order to secure a large crop. Large seeds and cultivators were in use. Standing water is destructive to wheat, all the cultivators say, and ground previously well drained is the best for wheat.

Harrowing the Potato Crop.

Cultivators do not agree as to the time for harrowing the potato crop for the best results. Some have them in the ground until after early autumn frosts, and the tops are well ripened, though many others harrow them under before the frosts are feared. The argument in favor of the practice is, that the tubers for the harvest harrowing and storing them has been saved, and the disease following is prevented, and the ground pre-empted for a subsequent crop without any ground and adds to the fertility of the soil. Others contend that the tubers dig in when they have been exposed to the growth and the vines begin to wither. Generally speaking it is safe to remove the crop soon after the vines are well ripened, though they are liable to wilt and damage if the storing changes to be followed in very dry weather. When the tubers show the slightest indication of rotting, then by all means delay the harvest, not only for reasons already mentioned, but because the tubers are in the light and air increases the disease and tends to spread it to the sound potatoes.

Digging in dry weather, clear weather and when the soil is dry, that the potatoes may come out clean. Whether one has a few bushels or several hundred bushels to dig, the utmost diligence is necessary to have the potatoes thoroughly dry, especially when a considerable quantity are to be stored in bulk. When the roots are perfectly healthy hundreds of baskets are often taken at once from the field to the place of storing without all roads attending. It is true, but the practice is not a safe one not to be followed under any circumstances if the tubers show the least symptom of rot. In this case spread in layers and exclude the light, putting until mid-winter to secure in heaps. If disease appears after harvest, carefully sort at once, dry the sound potatoes, place them in layers of charcoal dust, burnt clay or fine dry mould, which acts as an absorbent and, according to trustworthy authorities, is a complete contagion from any disease may be imperceptibly affected. Later, if necessary, a careful sorting is again to order to the finishing. Avoid, however, all handling as far as possible, and do not disturb the pile after January 1 unless necessary, as some varieties are inclined to sprout from that time forward.

All varieties of potatoes are better for an abundance of change in temperature, and especially if the change be great and includes prolonged exposure to the burning rays of the sun at the time of harvesting. Some farmers need to plow their wheat under in order to secure a large crop. Large seeds and cultivators were in use. Standing water is destructive to wheat, all the cultivators say, and ground previously well drained is the best for wheat.

A Match with a Watermelon.

A crowd had gathered almut eight o'clock last evening in front of Aldrich's fruit store, on State street, to witness a remarkable feat performed by one of Rockford's best known residents. The circumstances of the case are as follows: A few minutes before the time above mentioned that enterprising, music-loving and noisy citizen of Artesian persuasion—Peter Craig, Jr., if it (Queer enough, never)—came up State street and loafed in front of the store. His gaze was fastened eagerly yet earnestly upon a pile of large watermelons which graced the pavement. While in that attitude of hopeless longing he was seen by Ex-Alderman J. G. Hoxsey, who asked him how he would like to tackle one of the melons. Peter's face lighted up with a crescent smile as he described the lamentable state of his finances, but the look changed to one of incredulous delight when the ex-alderman agreed to pay for the biggest watermelon in the pile if he would agree to eat the whole of it. Peter flared him to keep his word, and, seizing the largest one handily within reach, put a huge jack knife, rolled up his sleeves, and got ready to make the attack. The melon screech was a huge dark one, weighing twenty-five and one-half pounds. Peter began the fight, and by the time he had made the first incision a crowd had collected around him. Boys were freely under on the scene, odds being laid that the job would not be completed. It was done in just thirteen minutes from the time of the attack. The last red morsel disappeared and Peter was the owner of the watermelon. He has heartily appreciated. If there is anybody in the city who thinks he can get away with a bigger melon than Pete C., let him issue a challenge at once.—Rockford (Ill.) Democrat.

—Professor Jevons presents what he considers a plausible explanation of the causes of comparatively dull, for cleansing purposes, a comparatively neutral soap is better than an alkaline carbonate. In this experiment that no less, or what is known as the Brownian movement of microscopic particles, is considerably increased by the addition of soap to water, and to this action he attributes the detergent effect of soap. Pure rain or distilled water has a high cleansing power, because it possesses in a high degree, the minute particles of dirt being thereby loosened and washed away. Hard waters of pure water arises from the vast decrease of particles due to the salts in solution, and hence the inferior cleansing power of such waters. If alkaline salts be added, dissolved in the water, it becomes capable of acting upon cloggin particles of dirt, and by their action is increased, not increased, but if soap be added the advantage is secured both of the alkali's dissolving power and the soap's detergent action. Soft water is therefore to be preferred for washing with soap, and hard water for washing with alkaline salts.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1879

For President in 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Grant's Honors.

In and out of the war spot in the department of mischief sit stands a cast filled with souvenirs of England, Ireland and Scotland, presented to the man who lives in the hearts of thousands of people of the United States, not as the president, but as the greatest soldier that ever lived.—Gen. U. S. Grant. Why to this quiet, true, ever loyal gentleman such distinguished honors have been accorded mystifies a great many of both prominent parties; but those who have known him intimately on battlefield, at fire-side, and in council have no wonder. He may have unbalanced aspirations, and may live to have them die, but nothing can ever be brought against him as a brave soldier, an unswerving friend. All the world knows of his triumphal journey around the world, but that little coin in our Republican hall meant to bring the honest, clearer to our comprehension. It is very true there are no wonderful works of art—except the casket—in each parchment speaks in at quaint wording of the respect and admiration felt for Ulysses Simpson Grant in every corner of the "right little, tight little" isle. The exhibit is not especially well gotten up. In the day there is no clear light to fall on the medals and caskets, and in the evening the light that might relieve it. But of course Scotchman's principle is in the way. Mr. Childs was kind enough to send some objects of interest to our exposition, and they should have been accorded a better place. There are in all twenty-nine different testimonials, some of which are so concealed by others that they could only be guessed by the numbers. The most beautiful are the caskets from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Ayr, the testimonials from Geneva, and the mulberry-wood casket from Shakespeare's home. The latter is most exquisitely carved, and around the lid bears the inscription, "Mulberry wood from Shakespeare's tree at New Place, Stratford-on-Avon." This, together with the addresses of welcome and the book presented by the daughters of the "Mayor and Mayoress" of the town, is the center of interest to sightseers. There is some subtle humor in looking at those silent mementoes from the home of the great bard which make people linger and talk over those things to the exclusion of all the other testimonials. The gold caskets from Ayr and Glasgow are beautifully wrought, each bearing upon its surface the arms of the United States, and the respective cities, or the arms of Great Britain. The silver box from Edinburgh loses upon it the inscription. "The City of Edinburgh to General Ulysses Simpson Grant, U. S. A., 1877." The gold casket from Edinburgh, while rich in beauty, contains the parchment address signed by the town authorities, also the city seal inclosed in a gold box.—Cincinnati Enquirer (Dem.).

The New York Tribune remarks that something of romance has attended the career of eminent soldiers. Thus of General Grant affords no exception to the rule. At the age of twenty-four he was winning his cruzbirs in some of the hardest fought battles of the Mexican War. At the age of thirty-five he was the assistant of a leather dealer at Galena, with no more prospect of the Presidency than any man of whom he bought or to whom he sold. When the civil war broke out he entered it, not as a paper-made Brigadier General, but only as a plain Captain of volunteers. Literally he had to work his way up, and his first promotions came from his skill and industry in drilling the raw Illinois volunteers. Usually tactics, he had a way of saying things which were half battles, and which opened him access to masters. He began at Paducah, where he announced that he "had nothing to do with opinions, and dealt only with armed rebellion." His furnace at Fort Donelson "Unconditional surrender"—became a cheerful proverb. In everybody's mouth were time other words: "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." Men welcomed these homely but decisive utterances as an earnest of a brilliant campaign, even when the night was the darkest.

Southern Democratic Opinions.

From the Thirteen Southern States, October 1.

The old union is bound to bust, unless we hold the fort.

The Democracy shall rule or the union shall be ruined.

Wait!

With our congressmen in the control, and our president in the White House.

The general government will be mulcatized through and through.

The Stars and Stripes will symbolize the principles typified by the Bonny Blue, and the doctrines of Jefferson Davis will prevail from ocean to ocean.

Wait!

The war is not over.

AND IT NEVER WILL BE OVER UNTIL OUR CAUSE HAS CONQUERED.

You may as well understand this first as last.

When Uncle comes up to the polls tell him that he

In this way Mississippians can rule Mississippi, and rule it by ballot, but simply means.

The Cincinnati Gazette's Washington correspondent asserts that Ben. Chalmers, of Mississippi, proposes that the Democratic party shall retire upon the electoral votes of Florida, South Carolina, Louisiana, and Mississippi, by having the legislatures of those States, during the coming winter, appoint presidential electors, and not allow the people to vote on the presidential question at all. Chalmers is reported as saying that the Independent movement in Mississippi is becoming formidable, and threatens to beat the Democratic party in 1880; that Louisiana is disturbed by the same breaking up in the Democratic party; and the South Carolina and Florida will probably go Republican if the people are allowed to vote. There for he proposes to have their legislatures appoint the presidential electors, and not allow the people to vote. The dispatch concludes:

"The plan has received strong support among those whom Ben. Chalmers gathered to consult it. When the National executive committee met, although it received informal attention, it was not deemed expedient to give the plan any prominence or publicity just at present."

One of Wisconsin's most honored men in the past, is forsaken by his political honor; or perhaps, after all, as Tom Hughes says, "if he never had any." It is ex-Mayor and ex-Governor Harrison Ludington of Milwaukee. For years ago the Republican party elected him Governor. Last month, at the State Republican Convention, he was a candidate for nomination to the same office, but was defeated in a fair contest by Governor Smith. This made him mad, and now he has taken his sore head over to the Democratic camp and is giving his support to Jenkins, the Democratic opponent of Governor Smith. The fact is, Governor William E. Smith is a vastly better Governor than Ludington was, and everybody in Wisconsin, except Ludington himself, and Dick Bean and their ex-official society in Milwaukee, knows it.

There is trouble brewing in the Green back in this State. The Jackson Sun reports that the chairman of the Greenback State committee, Moses W. Field, has been called for weeks to call a state convention, but would not act; therefore, on motion of senator H. C. Hodge, a state convention is invited to assemble in Jackson on Wednesday October 15, at 10 a. m., to reorganize, and all workers in the National Greenback party are requested to come together. Considering the results of this years elections the Greenbackers have reason enough to be troubled, but what they expect to accomplish in the future it would probably puzzle them to say. The Republican majority of over six thousand against a combined opposition last spring is likely to be multiplied by five at the next election.

An army officer has recently been compiling statistics, showing the proportion of military officers in the Federal service who have been educated at the Military Academy of the United States, and those who have not. Of the General and staff officers, 231 graduated at West Point, and 203 were appointed from civil life. In the line 587 are West Point graduates, and 697 are not.

Ben. Sam'l Beaty of Canton, O., an old Democratic leader of considerable strength in his State, created a great stir among the Democracy lately by publishing a letter openly coming out in favor of the election of the Republican State ticket, and abandoning the Democratic party, to his letter he declares, first, that upon the question of the finances, the Republican party is nearest right, and is the only party it is safe to trust; and second, that the question of the State's Rights confronts us now as it did in 1860-1, and that he can never consent to surrender the Government to the brigadiers who attempt to destroy it by the war of the rebellion. He says he fought against them, and that he must redeem he fought.

Tilden is represented as being very depressed as to the outlook, and says that the rebels in congress have put a Democratic triumph next year out of the question, and it is inferred that he isn't so anxious for the nomination as he once was. Having made this unspoken declaration, the probability is that he is working like lightning in some hitherto unexpected subterraneous quarter, for the nomination. Remember, that after all disaster has peeled the dead possum gets up and goes on his lick without disturbance.

A colored resident of Okolona, Miss., writes to a Northern newspaper that it is not true that the Negro has sought to rule there, to the exclusion of the white men; on the contrary, he "has sought white men for the highest offices of honor and trust." He recognizes that a white minority has established tyranny by whipping, mutilation and killing, and says that in Okolona, one of the fairest places for the Negro's growth is appropriated for white schools, but not a dollar for the black.

The Indianapolis Sentinel (Dem.), speaking of the President's recent speech, says, calls him "a Louisiana liar" in "the presidential chair," "a fool and a traitor," "a miserable wretch," "something meaner than a carpet-bagger." Abraham Lincoln was called a "dictator," and Grant a "drunkard" and "fool," by just such papers as the Sentinel.

While Gen. Grant was sojourning in San Francisco, Dennis Kearney called twice at the Palace Hotel, sending up his card and requesting an interview each time; but the General declined to see the champion agitator, and he went away disappointed.

It is reported that the Post Office Department proposes, at the next letting of mail routes in the several States to extend the service, changing weekly routes into semi-weekly, and semi-weekly into tri-weekly, with a daily service at all county seat towns.

Hendricks said in his speech at Eaton, Ohio, last week Friday, that for a solid north to oppose the solid south is "treason." For the south to be solid Democratic isn't treason, it is Democracy; but on the north to be solidly Republican is "treason," said Hendricks.

It is noticed, as an indication of the returning prosperity of the United States, that the entries of the General Land Office, at Washington, show for this season, exceeds any since the days of the rebellion.

A reporter asked Gen. Grant what he would do if the presidential nomination were tendered him in a political exigency, and Gen. Grant looked out upon the Pacific as if he would like to see the further shore.

THE Acting Secretary of the Interior Department has decided that a woman cannot come to his bureau and obtain a patent for her husband's invention, but that the husband or assignees must attend in person or by power of attorney.

RECENT reports show that the excess of exports of merchandise in this country for the year ending August 31, 1876, amounted to $280,590,041.

THE Treasury Department in Washington has recently divided into the 26 districts authorizing the redemption of called bonds where, over and unexpended evidence had been furnished that they were not claimed. It does not apply to anyone whilst at the time of their surrender, were detached from the bonds. The total amount of coupons that have been destroyed since they and bonds were issued from the bonds, and could not, therefore, be redeemed by the Government.

AT Milwaukee on the 30th ult. a servant girl named Mary Schwartz used kerosene to light a fire. Her clothes were set on fire, and she was fatally burned. She ran shrieking through the streets into a saloon, where the flames were extinguished, but too late to save her life.

THE public-debt statement, issued on the 1st, shows the following: Total debt including interest on coin, $2,250,763,823; $2,230,987,331. Cash in Treasury, $236,788,679. Debt, less amount in Treasury, $2,013,975,152. Increase during the month, $1,763,552. Decrease since June 30, 1876, $4,385.

A RAWLINS (Wy. T.) dispatch of the 1st reports almost another Custer affair on the southern borders of the Territory. It seems that Major Bromhurgh, of the Fourth United States Infantry, was sent on the 14th into the Sith River Ute country. When within twenty-five miles of the country Bromhurgh's advance, while cautiously creeping an ambuscade in a narrow canyon, the command was met by about 500 Ute hostiles. After considerable engagement and manœuvring, which Major Thornburgh and thirteen enlisted men were killed, and thirty-five others were wounded. Every officer in the command except one was hit. The Indians also killed about 200 Government mules and destroyed a large amount of other property. Finding that they were getting the worst of it the troops fell back to the corralled train, made breastworks of the wagons and intrenched themselves as well as they could. After confronting them until the night of the 30th the Indians withdrew. An expedition under General Merritt was sent for their relief on the afternoon of the 1st. Nothing had been heard from Indian Agent Meeker or since the 29th of September and it was believed he and his family had been massacred.

ACCORDING to a recent Washington letter there was then in the Government Treasury but $6,179,000 in gold in denominations of less than twenty dollars, an amount not sufficient to meet any active demand upon the Treasury for small coin. To supply this deficiency, it was said the Treasury Department intended to coin much of the foreign gold received at the New York Assay office into five-dollar and twenty-dollar gold pieces.

A STATEMENT has recently been issued by the Treasury Department at Washington relative to the four-per-cent. bonds, to the effect that the proceeds of the sale of such bonds had been paid into the Treasury, except the called bonds and coupons in transit from the Government's agents in London. The amount of called bonds outstanding, not yet presented for payment, was $28,301,950, all of which bonds were provided for by cash in the Treasury, except $607,050, for which an equal amount of unsold four-per-cent. bonds was retained in the Department. The aggregate of the four-per-cent. bonds sold was $740,847,950.

DURING August there arrived at the port of New York 72,881 immigrants, against 7,619 during the same month last year. The total arrivals of immigrants during the year ending August 30 was 108,767, against 75,065 during 1876.

THE Council of the Massachusetts Mutual Society have recently resolved to accept women to membership.

AT Adrian, Michigan, on the 2d, during the progress of a race at the fall grounds, the grand stand, upon which over 2,000 people were standing, suddenly gave way and precipitated its load to the ground. Six persons were killed outright, and several others fatally injured. A coroner's jury found the cause was gross carelessness in the construction. The accident was the result of faulty construction.

THE premium of surviving prisoners at the late war, held at Fairfax Court on the 1st and 2d, was well attended. The proceedings were of a very interesting character, consisting of addresses and reminiscences of war experiences, etc. A procession on the 2d had nearly 2,000 soldiers in line, about one-half of whom had been prisoners of war during the rebellion.

THE number of dead by the Adrian (Mich.) disaster up to the evening of the 3d had reached thirteen and there were said to be 24 sufficiently injured to require medical treatment to cause a mass of war, humanities and sympathy.

UP to the 1st inst. arrears of pension claims to the amount of $30,342,562 had been settled. The average amount of arrears in each case was $87. The whole number of cases disposed of to that date was 348,782. It is estimated that there are about 1,000 or 1,200 unadjusted claims still pending, the settlement of which will require the appointment of additional National Bank clerks.

IT is stated that the publication of the annual report in 1878 was $10,000. The number of dollars issued in the months of November and December, 1876, and in January, May, June, July and August, 1878, is considerably less than $1,000,000 for each month. The amount issued in February was $1,000,000; March, $1,001,000; April, 12,000; May, $1,000,000; June, $1,000,000; July, $1,000,000; August, $1,000,000. The amount issued during the preceding four months, the total average amount of $1,000,000 issued and the past four months has been at one time or which more than $1,000,000 per month.

A WASHINGTON special of the 5th says the Post-office Department had made a decision, which had been adopted by the Postmaster-General, and which will be strictly enforced, prohibiting the mailing of lottery to lottery companies or their agents, also forbidding the sending of money in the mail except by postal order or registered letter. The lottery agents in Washington were in dignant at the decision, and thought it would not stand. It was said the lottery companies would take the case to the courts and mail lists their right to the use of the mails.

A TAOS (New Mexico) dispatch of the 30th says a border just to from the Ute country reports that a man named Taylor, who had been with the Utes, had told him that he rode around Ouray's Pueblo's intrenched camp on the 1st, and that it was held by the people in sight. Subsequently heavy firing was heard in that direction. Mr. Taylor says the White River country was full of bodies, including those of Northern and Southern Utes, the Arrapahoes, Shoshones, Snakes and Bannocks. Nearly all Indians doubted that Agent Meeker and his family had been murdered. The mountain North Park had been ordered to leave under penalty of massacre.

ON the 4th the Governor of Colorado was notified that the Indians were threatening Lake City and Ouray and the San Juan country, and asked to send troops and ammunition.

Personal and Political.

A CALL has been issued by Hugh Dorsey, as Chairman of the Union Democratic Executive Committee of Fulton county, for a Union National Convention, to be held at St. Louis on the 9th of next January, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency of the United States, and to transact such other business as may come before the Convention. The chartered Democrats, Cliques or club rooms or parties are called upon to hold a County Convention on the 25th of December to elect one delegate to the National Convention. The Chairman says, in the call, "there will be no fusion with either of the old parties at any time or under any circumstances."

ABOUT thirty thousand children of the San Francisco public schools attended a reception given by General Grant at the Woodward Gardens in that city on the 2d inst.

THE trustee of Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague was refused admission to the Sprague residence at Cumberland, on the 29th ult., by the ex-governor although he was accompanied by Mr. Chaffee, the trustee of Mr. Sprague estate. The object of the visit was to make an inventory of the property in the house, that Mrs. Sprague might indicate what she claimed as her personal property.

AT St. Louis on the afternoon of the 30th ult. Professor Wise, the noted aeronaut, and George Beer, Teller of the First National Bank of that city, made a balloon ascension, intending to remain up all night. Nothing had been heard from the balloon or its occupants up to the 30th ult. They were thought to have taken a northeasterly course, and may have landed in some place in Michigan or Canada remote from civilization. Great anxiety was felt in St. Louis concerning their fate.

THE American Literary Bureau announcement on the 30th ult. that the friends of Mr. Redpath had not heard of or from him since his mysterious disappearance from New York City some time before.

THE Republicans of Nebraska held their State Convention at Omaha on the 1st. Amasa Cobb, present incumbent, was nominated by acclamation for Supreme Judge, and John H. Gibson and J. W. Gannett were elected by acclamation for Regents of the State University. The platform endorses Hayes' administration, in which was a resolution acclaiming the return of General Grant, and characterizing him as "the champion of our Union, the protector of our Nation, and the hero of the great rebellion."

GENERAL GRANT and wife, accompanied by a small party of relatives and friends, left San Francisco on the 30th ult. for the Yosemite Valley. At Stockton they met with a brilliant reception at the hands of the authorities and a large assemblage of citizens.

PRESIDENT HAYES and party were at Springfield, Ill., on the 30th ult., and arrived at Indianapolis, Ind., on the evening of the 31st. They were met and greeted at both cities, and at many points along their line of travel, by many thousands of people.

WENDELL PHILLIPS has declined the nomination for Lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts tendered him by the Greenback State Convention.

THE Bunker Hill (Ill.) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes that Susan Wise's lantern pass that point fifteen miles northeast of as found about 4 o'clock on the evening of the 30th ult., the day of the ascension. From there the balloon took a course almost directly north, and was subsequently seen about ten miles west of Alton by Professor Wise's sister, who had also been old or relish, and says it was calm and had never been out before, and was one of the last ever made.

A ST. LOUIS dispatch of the 5th says a telegram had been received from Girard, Ill., from a reporter who had accompanied Professor Wise, Jr., to explore the Macoupin Creek bed run in search of the lost balloon party, to the effect that they had found no trace of the balloon or its occupants in the section and they did not believe they had come down south of Springfield. The balloon was seen Sunday night, 29th ult. by farmers east of Girard very high in the air, and observations were also taken of the course. Professor Wise's sister is also confident from the direction she saw the balloon that its course was northeast. The missing travelers had landed in Macoupin county.

THERE was a postponement of cases in the number of new cases and deaths on the 4th. The deaths were twenty and the new cases eighty-eight. The total number of cases to date was 5,619; deaths, 976. The figures do not comprise the cases and deaths that occurred outside the corporation line. Six cases, five whites and four blacks, occurred on the 5th.

Foreign.

ON the 29th ult. the Russian version of the late battle with the Tekke-Turcomans was received. According to this, instead of a Russian defeat, it was a substantial Russian victory. The latter lost seven officers and 128 soldiers killed, and sixteen officers and 234 soldiers wounded, but they captured the enemy's intrenchments and inflicted upon them a loss of several thousand men. The expedition has not been abandoned, as reported from Simla.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A FEW days ago Il Averill and Frank Brown, of North Bradley, came to Ionia together and went to Grand Rapids and to a fine there. A check for $160.75 was given them, which Brown took, got it cashed and skipped out, leaving Averill in the lurch.

THE last lot shipments from the Saginaw River during the month of September were over 5,000,000 feet.

MISS POLZEN was struck by a locomotive at East Saginaw on the 30th, thrown thirty feet, and fatally injured.

GEORGE and William Bishop quarrelled at Pentland, near East Saginaw, a few days ago, and William was fatally hurt. It seems that a younger brother, twelve year old, was sent to some of the tenants to the store for groceries, and was going to ride the mule, when George interfered and said he would walk. William, who was at work in the field, came up and said if they would not work the mule he would turn it into the field. One word brought on another, and the elder brother, William who worked the place, slapped Jonathan in the face, when the latter interfered, and, opening a door, pushed Charles out, with the remark that if he could not have his own way in the world he did not want to live. Charles went to the woodpile, got an axe and stood by the door, and when William came out struck him, inflicting a fatal gash. When asked if he was sorry, he said: "No, I only wish I had killed the cursed fool." William says the thought he is dying at last accounts.

ONE of the odd men of Kalamazoo was at the paperstall a few days ago, when he heard Frankie screaming and calling out. Round a corner came a runaway horse, the driver in the grip of the front. The lad rushed out, "I'll give you a dollar to save my little brother!" pointing to the driver in imminent peril. At the small peril to himself the capitalist jumped in and succeeded in saving the child, who must have exhibited that agility for the family concert. His courageous savior had to have assistance himself to get out of his dangerous position. "Well, I'll be darned!" he asked a friend to whom the gentleman was relating the incident. "Well, yes," said he, "I am astonished myself, but I'll be darned if I'll pull a day or two after, the little fellow came up and tendered his money, but I told him he had better keep it."

THE Saginaw Courier says: "Lumbering operations in this section are now at their height. Every mill is running to its full capacity, and the woods are full of men and teams. The long strain of logs and heavy, being swept from the banks under such trying circumstances, the sudden deliverance from death and confinement to render him helpless as a child. He sank to the ground remembered nothing more. At last, however, he left on foot for the next stopping route, and, as they shook hands and bade him good by, they looked the happiest band of men I ever saw.

A Life Saved by a Wife's Letters.

The following story was told recently in a Denver (Col.) Court by a lost day in July, 1860, a herdsman was mending his cattle to a new range, farther south, near Hebron, Texas and passing down the banks of a stream his herd became mixed with other cattle that were grazing in the valley and some of them failed to be separated. The next day about noon a band of about a dozen mounted Texas rangers overtook the herdsman and demanded their cattle, which they said were stolen.

It was before the day of law and confusion, and Texas was one had better kill five men than steal a cattle worth five dollars, and the herdsman knew it. He tried to explain, but they told him to count about. He offered to turn over all the cattle near his own but they laughed at the proposition, and told him that they roughly considered the whole herd and he'd the rider hanging on a tree as a warning to others in the region.

The poor fellow was completely overcome. They could not grant him a few moments, and then told him if he did not count them quickly they would count for him. He counted the cattle, and, as he came to the middle, got up and stood by the door, and when William came out struck him, inflicting a fatal gash. When asked if he was sorry, he said: "No, I only wish I had killed the cursed fool." William says the thought he is dying at last accounts.

Mrs. Winchester, of Kimball, St. Clair County, was eighty years old the other day, and her friends gave her a buggy. She drove to Port Huron, marketed a load of wheat, made the 50 miles in the afternoon, ate supper, and drove back again, a journey of twenty miles.

The Mayville, Tuscola county, people are trying to secure an extension of the Lake Huron Railroad to that village, with some probability of success.

A cyclone commenced to a heavy rain passed over the County Farm at Ypsilanti, in Washtenaw County, on the afternoon of the 31, doing great damage. Both tents were torn to shreds, and fences blown down. The tent where tables were set for the incidental persons was blown down, overturning the stove and a large reservoir of boiling water, severely scalding Mrs. Sadler, one of them, with an infant a few months old, probably fatally. In the main hall the exhibits were considerably injured by the wind. One farm exhibiting quite a large stock of silks report an entire loss.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

SPEAK KINDLY, ALWAYS.

By the hands of the river I watched alone,
And I saw the [illegible] dropped a small stone;
It sank from my sight, and I went on my way,
And the ripples soon covered the surface so clear,
That no ripple could show the place where it fell.

I paused by that spot in a day or two more,
And the waters flowed on as I saw them before;
But no ripple could show the stone so clear,
Which had fallen to the bottom and rested there.

So the harsh word I say, for perhaps uttered in the wind,
And shall be forgotten by me and by you,
Yet the pain it may cause, the unrest it may cause,
Oh! think not the pain is over in any one true;
To hearts we have wounded in anger or jest,
But which we have pierced in earnest,
Let us speak kindly to each one or speak not at all.

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS.

Hundred schools are turned out nine,
That's the way we mind our business,
Until we think about public doors—
Then we mind other people's business.

Can't find fault with their neighbors' children,
Business enough of their own,
Can't find fault with their neighbors' children,
She busies up, mind I was myself.

You have been a busy body,
Your own business you've neglected,
Is the record true, and I quote aright,
Find out by the first and second reading.

Then second look, and I quote again,
Mr. greatest has not yet to end until,
Find out by the first and second reading,
Then you'll find out your business.

Your own school, minus boys, full of fun,
Your own business, your own business,
Now that is good enough for you to do,
Mind your own business.

ALONG THE LINE.

"There, Winn Wright, can't we track your horrid buggy more right kinder than? Won't you ever leave when I tell you to?" and Meh Wright, for working women than for men—no use in whining over it, though! We must take it as it comes.

"I don't believe you care much for me nowadays, Meh," said Winn, humbly.

Meh curled her lip. It seemed particularly ridiculous in Winn to talk sentiment now, for he had a tar streak oblique across his left cheek, and some coarse cloth with imperfectly-pressed seams and ragged button-holes.

"I reckon you wouldn't drive on that still, Winn, you know how annoying it is."

After a half hour which Meh spent, for the most part, outside the little living room, Winn said goodbye, and started for the depot. On his return and back would make up his day's trip.

Meh put on her pretty brown cashmere with white lace and cardinal ribbons for dinner, and scrubbed soap in her hair, and took the chair by the window.

She heard the occasional slush of wheels through the melting snow outside, or the thud of rubbershod feet through the water on the spongy ice, the regular drip from the roof into the tin conductors, and the drowsy chirp of the canary above the window garden.

Meh felt sad. Little did she think when playing the organ on Sundays in the Sweetville Methodist church, and taking lessons in crochet, where colors at the Young Ladies' Institute, that she should one day be doing her own work, and downright hard work, too, in a little house with four rooms only, on the lower floor.

She might "have done better." There was Samuel Fletcher who every summer, now, came to Sweetville with his carriage horses and his saddle horses. There was Charlie Fordyce, sure—why! Winn was a good fellow. She loved Winn, of course; but Winn had to "live" for everybody, and Meh had feared would interfere with her "living." That stupidity wearied her. Life was wearisome anyway—cheerless and prospectless.

It may not be the most judicious intellectual exercise for men or women to review matrimonial opportunities, even if without the slightest disloyalty of imagination. Might-have-beens are extremely slippery premises anyway. Possibly, my dear, had you presented upon the smiles you come close to to more, you would have found smiles significant only according to the imagination that interpreted them. Possibly, my dear madam, the man who came rather impressively offered himself to you, now ascribes the mortifying fact to a truculent impulse, and is sure he should love to and a waycot of the engagement had you accepted him.

Meh sat for a few minutes, her face buried in her palms; then parted her hands and looked out on the snow sifting. Matter-filled foot-paths and velled inserts groaned thin and chilly; the street full of returning shop hands. From out the morning figures one stood within the gate. Orton!

Orton was employed in very humble capacity at the office. The company had a habit of falling back upon him when bad news was to be communicated.

Meh had strength to open the outer hall door; then sank back upon the lower stair.

"Don't tell me, Orton, don't; Is he dead? Is he dead?"

"The Lord help you, Mrs. Wright; you don't know how bad he is. The bulletin is off the track—down Deep Gully—thirteen cars down. They hadn't taken him out when the last telegram came."

"I must go; Has the wrecker started?"

"Just gone; but Ellis'll find an engine to take you up. Perhaps you'd better not go, though. It may be pretty bad."

Mrs. Weir entered, put on Meh's hat and shawl, drew on her overshoes, supported her to the door and took the key.

Meh grasped Orton's arm, and was conscious in a dazed sort of way of sliding over ice and water in Ledyard.

The "Flyer" was just stemming through, fresh up to go out on the rolling prairie from Bush for a few empty cars. It was short work to run out into the turn-table and come up headed for the Gully.

Superintendent Ellis handed Meh into the cab. Engineer Babcock nodded, speechless, and turned to his throttle again, and the throttle stood; the bell—knell-like in the clear air—and the "Flyer" shot out across the prairie, the plain with its silvered brown mowings, patches of dark plowed land, and shallow pools reflecting the purple twilight.

The "Flyer" had been carrying nine ty pounds of steam. The stoker began shoveling on the coal. Meh, from her little window, stood, looked out and saw already a tower or two set away in its happiness from the deathdealing track. Early lamps glimmered. O, Winn, Winn, will the early lamp never grow glimmer for you!

With many a sharp curve, with many a startled screech, the "Flyer" struck in the hills—ascending grade now—smoke and sparks flying past the cab windows—the pointer of the steam gauge around hundred and ten. They were threading across the bridge where Lemon Brook and Bark had their lives; they had entered the little dell, passed by Jones Sabbath, where Arthur Ellis's young life went out in dreadful hobo haust.

"Do you know—did they say—was the line plain—moving any petroleum?" Meh's white face quivered from forehead to chin.

Babcock shook his head; he didn't know.

A whistle, a shrick rather—struck the cab; and Ellis, recrebreasted to Gerzarin, and was seen to throw back across the swollen mountain torrent at the right of the track.

At first all was the forest was full of great blocks of ice, foaming, champing, jostling each other. A mail-reservoir above had "broken up." The reservoir itself lay still as death, black and lonely as the dark river. A yellow moon peered weirdly over the top of the steep mountain-side. Steam up to one hundred and thirty now, and hissing from the safety-valve. Gray rock-faced sides of lower mountain echoed the rush and the roar! Fine-plumed crests of Gobble shook through their ranks.

On into the Gully! Every racing rock and tree in the approach left Meh's heart beating faster and more suffocatingly.

The "Flyer," as she came to a standstill, seemed to shiver through every heavy driving-wheel, through every polished rod and grinder.

The stoker, first on the ground, reached up to take out Meh.

The moon, not a yard above the eastern horizon, let fall a weird, oblique light. Two or three engines stood on the track twenty yards. The great cracker rose wraith-like, its ropes and timbers creaking under the strain—shouts of men—a chain rattling, up from boards crashing out on the track a hand-car bearing something covered by a rubber blanket, and beside it a sashawled, crouched figure from which came the Irish wail:

"O, Tim, spake to me Aunce more; spake Aunce more, Tim!"

Tim had been Winn's stoker.

Two little country doctors—surgeons, say—who, in default of anything to do to do for poor Tim, had been sitting on a boulder consulting over a little bottle of whisky, came toward the "Flyer."

"His wife?"—to Babcock. "Not they haven't found him yet. It's not ten minutes since they took out this one. She going down?"

Meh was tearing her way through the blackberry vines around the mouth of the Gully?

"Here, madam. I wouldn't advise you to go down. They'll bring him up as soon as found. If you will go, though, you'd better take a little something stimulating—there!"

Meh didn't turn. Down the rough declivity—over ledges, bushes, boulders—tripping against wheels—stumbling over a mass of broken sidings—shaking pebbles in grains. Babcock and the doctors followed with a confused murmur of, "Great strain"—"nervous system"—"a little something stimulating"—

The shattered Buccaneers had been drawn out, and fires that had started up from the semi-red coals had been extinguished, let no man know what flames might be idly creeping on between the muse.

The men working in the debris did not observe Meh until her voice, like a steel javelin, smote the sides of the gully: "Winn!"

"Winn, Winn!"

Then, faint and feeble, only a few feet away—a little back, a little beneath came the response:

"Here, Meh; here!"

They clustered upon that part of the ruins; they piled ax, and pulley, and lever—lifting wheels and trucks, tossing aside grain, thrusting off girders and fragments of sidings.

Up on the track stood three petroleum cars; a fourth lay half-way down with its stout guard broken, its side battered, but thank God! whole. A fifth, hurled on the sharp projecting rocks, had been read, and had poured its contents through the wheat. A dozen grain cars had been crushed and piled in between this three and the engine, but now rapidly the petroleum would penetrate, or how quickly it might be ignited by some unextinguished ember, no man could tell.

A sudden pause in the work—they had reached Winn. A silence like that following Meh's cry—they had drawn him forth. Up the sides of the ravine straggled the procession—stretcher, men, physicians, men with axes, shovels, crowbars.

No one observed a slender spire of blue smoke that curled up at the edge of the saturated grain; but in less than two minutes all the wreck was a mass of crackling, roaring flame—flame blazing up red and blue—pulses to the cool, moon-lit heavens, lapping the western-bestain sleepers of the bridge, and mingling through the branches of the overhanging hemlocks; but Winn was safe, safe upon the track.

He had lain with his lower limbs torn near the escaping steam. Fastidious people, reading of the accident in the morning papers, without responders would spare the public such horrible details.

The doctors administered brandy and injected morphine, and Winn was unconscious of much pain. While the train backed rapidly down to the Cluckly turntable he lay with his head upon a pillow in Meh's lap, looking up at her silently. His eyes fell at length from her face to her shoulders.

"Meh, Meh, you'll kill me if you think of me now!"

The first tears Meh had shed since those chilled by Mr Charlie Fordyce's tender sympathy rained on Winn's upturned face.

"Don't, Winn; don't! kill me if you think of me now!"

"Meh, I am always tried—lately."

This old friend of the days when she played the church organ, and took lessons in French and water-colors—she seemed so well fitted to sympathize with her!

Two or three bright irrepressible tears fell over her cheek. Agitatedly, she laid her hand upon the sofa arm: Mr. Fordyce's chair was at the end of the sofa.

Very reverentially Mr. Fordyce bent over the hand.

"You don't wear the mourgate now."

"I can't; my fingers have grown so large—with doing my own work."

Mr. Fordyce's eyes rested for an instant in Meh's.

She drew away her hand; but Mr. Fordyce understood that his sympathy was not offensive.

After three somewhat slightly different Meh's manner. They talked of agate and onyx, opal and jacinth, and all the secondary stones. Mr. Fordyce said a design once cut in jacinth was never obliterated. He was sympathetic, and grave, and tender, to the very last step over the front door threshold. Then he whistled through the gate, and buttoned up his coat with the comfortable assurance of a man who had successfully engineered the part of lady-charmer, his pay going on all the same.

Meh stepped into an adjacent room to attend to the mirror how her hair looked, and whether the cardinal knot under her chin were not disarranged. Gentlemen of Mr. Fordyce's taste were not inaugurated. A cardinal keeps against a background of white illusion.

As the turned away satisfied, through a half-open door she saw a pair of coarse boots—mere soles of leather—and toes pointing accusingly outward. Of a worsted-knit pair of boots it would be difficult to conceive. Turning in the not-red-dried hazel and hair, wrinkles above the short instep. A revolver, strong as Nemesis, aided Meh.

She crept into the other room and sat down alone. What had she said to Orton, poor, pitiful, Winn? Was it possible that she had misunderstood her perception had she accepted and had taken? What sympathy had she been so deficient in self-respect as to solicit, and he so darling as to accept?

She sat down again. The snow had melted off the circular verbena mounds. Winn helped her set them heather. He had always helped her. She covered her face with her hands, conscious only of her own ingratitude.

The silence gradually began to thrill with presences. The distant world outside, with its unreasonable sunshine and warmth, seemed waiting for cold and storms. For what was she waiting? Drip of eaves, click of clock, chirp of canary, everything pressed an unintelligible utterance upon her.

SOME INDIAN SINGING.

Deacon Richard Smith, of the Chicago Preacher.

Detroit Free Press

In a former communication which made mention of Grand Traverse Bay, I referred to a Chicago preacher and to Deacon Richard Smith, of the Lawrentia Gazette. There was a chasm between the two five months after the first meeting. Three of us sat on a pile of slabs at four bits, waiting for the boat to go. I think we had it all planned to pass a game of three-handed euchre, and I'll ask the Deacon was trying to deal himself all the bowers in the pack, when along came the preacher. His appearance was hailed with joy.

"Come, old fellow—come and take a hand in," called the Deacon, as he threw me a pack of cards.

The preacher looked horrified.

"No Dyes—and swore about us," continued the Deacon as he chuckled away. "Come on—don't you find I warm them chaps out of their boots?"

"Sir!" thundered the preacher.

"Oh, well, we'll play pikes if you don't like euchre, and the bourer——"

"I wish it to be understood that I——"

"Well, we take old sledge, then—any thing to please you, though I should judge from your looks that you can play almost anything and win. Come—cut a down here!"

"I'm a preacher, sir—a preacher from Chicago, sir!" almost screamed the stranger as he fell back.

"Well—I'll be—blowed!" shouted the Deacon. "Didn't think it. I won't play a game with you unless you tie up your countenance!"

That started the chasm. It grew a little day by day, though an outsider could not have seen it, and finally, when we took the boat to go up the lake, the preacher went to his cot and sulked.

"That Chicago preacher is in the ladies' cabin talking the women and children out of my company should be held up as an awful warning to the world at large. Now, then, I'm going to get even with him if I have to swallow a cow bar to do it, and we are no friend of mine if you don't help me!"

Maybe the recording angel forgive me, but I and three others agreed into a fiendish conspiracy with Richard Smith to worship and humiliate the Chicago preacher.

Nothing occurred until we reached Northport. The preacher held aloof from us, and we had no chance to throw him overboard or cast him down to the cold lowers. The Indians had been holding a camp-meeting at Northport, and about 300 of them came aboard the boat with moccasins in their hands. The preacher came out to welcome them, and the boat had scarcely left the dock when he got half a dozen of them together and started them singing. Perhaps you never heard any Indians singing. If you have no Indians handy, draw a pig across a hot, sultry day and you'll get the tune—or some one to blow a fife, and the devil will be just as sweet, and sad, and mournful and lingering as if twenty pale-faces sat in a circle around you. After a few minutes the preacher wanted to quit. He believed in congregational singing, but he couldn't go an Indian measure of Sankey's choicest hymns. It was at the time that Deacon Smith came to me and asked for a private interview. In two minutes we had a great big six foot Indian down stairs. He was the wood-sawyer in the lot. He'd sing against a fish horn all day long, and then beat a horse-fiddle after sundown. He sung bass, alto, tenor, and four other sorts of singing all at once, and he depended on his nose to do half of it.

A pint bottle of liquid rum put into this Indian's stomach, and he was told to go aboard and sing as if a drove of wolves were after him. He was to sing for and at the preacher, and he was to stop until the machinery in his larynx gave out, or the preacher died.

"We understand," he replied, as he half emptied the bottle, "and don't you forget her!"

We went up stairs and sat in the gangway to cut off escape, and just as the preacher was trying to bring the singing to a close our Indian stood his caster into the ring. He had removed coat, hat, and vest, tightened his strap, and as he leaned sit over two chairs and came down before the preacher he yelled out.

"You wait a little! Me knock——out of all that singing!"

Then he began. He waltzed, jumped, kicked, sneezed, and cracked his knee. His hymn was "We're Going Home To-morrow," and in about every word of it. Some of the words were shrieked, some screamed, and others were spouted forth in a guttural sounding like the roll of a pumpkin over a shattered door. The preacher seemed to be highly pleased at first, but after a minute his smile died away, and in another he had his hands over his ears.

"How I do love choir singing!" remarked Deacon Smith as the fun went on, and that remark encouraged two more Indians to rise up, throw off their coats, and join the jollification. One of them sang: "I Would Not Live Always," and the other got on his work in an "Happy Day." We thus had three hymns going at once, and I solemnly swear the public that they went for all they were worth.

They surrounded the preacher, danced before and behind him, sang him into corners and out, and every moment a green Indian joined in with a new hymn. When the concert was at its height I count ed thirteen different different hymns, four war songs, and "Nancy Lee," and Deacon Smith apparently folded his hands and solemnly sank.

"Some brothers—and if I am ever converted it will be by just such good strong music as this!"

Then rang the preacher down stairs, up stairs, into the lower cabin, and [illegible] ran, piled, and fled to [illegible]

That "terrible financial evil" is upon us. Our currency is what the Republican party has been striving to make it ever since the war "all that the most captious could hope for"—the paper part of it equivalent to the coin it represents, at par throughout all this land. The able Democratic editor acknowledges this. Acknowledges also that better times have come, and come to stay. That is what Republicans have all the time contended would result from their policy of wedding steadily to a sound currency and a sound business basis. That is what we have instead of the awful disasters that our opponents, Democratic and Greenback district alike, predicted would befall us. The logic of events is too strong for them. What they opposed as an unmixed evil and denounced as the instrument of universal bankruptcy, has brought stability, encouragement, renewed activity, and general prosperity. The able editors of the Democratic party confess it now, and the confession is their own condemnation.

ANOTHER STORE.—M. Dickinson, a gentleman hailing from Frankfort, we believe, has purchased the building occupied by Dr. Lewis as a drug store, and will move it to the vacant lot owned by Dr. Lewis on the opposite side of the street, and put in a stock of goods embracing tobacco, cigars, crockery, and possibly a general stock. Mr. Dickinson is in Chicago buying goods. Dr. Lewis will occupy temporary quarters as an office for the present, and it is rumored that he will soon commence building on his lot near the bridge.

A great Republican gain in the North ern elections will make a change in the attitude of the South. The it the way to bring peace and free elections to the South. Every Democratic vote in the North is a vote to perpetuate and intensify that despotism of violence and terrorism in the South which has stabbed personal rights, and which threatens to this great republic the financial downfall of having its entire Government swept by a force which has trampled upon elections

BEAVER ISLAND.

DEAR SENTINEL:

On Wednesday last we were invited by Judge J. Mile Eaton to accompany him on a trip to the Reserve. Our party consisted of the Judge, Mr. G. D. Hilton, Mr. W. R. Johnson, who managed our boat, and ourself. The weather was fine but there was not quite enough for rapid sailing.

Out on the lake we saw some beautiful sights in the way of vessels heavily loaded with grain, propellers bound upward, etc. Though there was a fair breeze, yet there was considerable dead sea which proved too much for the bowl stomach of the Judge. As to our theological stomach "deponent saith not."

We arrived safely at "The Point" a little after sundown, and secured comfortable quarters at the Hotel kept by Mr. Joseph Isch, where the Judge did good justice to the bountiful supper provided for our entertainment.

We will now attempt to give some items of history in regard to the early settlement of the Island, and if we fall into error the Petoskey Record will undoubtedly volunteer his services to set us right.

Beaver Island was originally occupied by the Indians who had some fine sugar orchards and gardens upon it. The first white settler was Mr. Abra Cable who built a small store at the point and also a dock. Some after, a few fishermen settled on the west side of the Island. This was before Mormon times. Not long after the death of Joseph Smith of Nauvoo fame, one Mr. Bangis J. Strang, formerly of New York, but at that time of Boyne Wis. who was a lawyer by profession, and naturally a shrewd man, professed to have a revelation from God that he was the divinely appointed successor of the celebrated Joseph Smith, who, as was claimed, fell a martyr to the faith. Strang also claimed to discover some plates that contained the original of "The Law of Moses," a book printed by himself, which was to be the standard of Mormonism from his stand point.

Professing to be guided by the divine hand, he gathered around him a band of followers, which constituted a branch of the Church of Latter Day Saints, with himself as the visible head. He also claimed to be guided by revelation to Beaver Island, the "promised land" of temporal "Canaan" of the faithful. Here the [illegible] commenced, at an [illegible] which meant nothing from the Gentiles. His first and lawful wife, Mary, did not emigrate to Mormonism. His polygamous wives were Elvira Fields, Betsy McNutt, and Phebe and Delia Wright. With these he lived in bright(?) seclusion in his block harem which is still standing on the identical spot where it was originally built. In its day it was quite a pretentious edifice.

Next week we will have something more to say about the operations of Strang and his followers, and will also speak of the present residents of the Island, their prospects etc.

CLERICUS.

THE FURNACE.—Correspondence between the Pine Lake Iron Company and Hon. John Nichols, indicates beyond a doubt that the Iron works will be commenced before the close of the month The machinery and iron work for the buildings is in process of manufacture and we shall expect soon to see them on the ground.

THE Session of the Board of Supervisors just closed, has been characterized throughout for its courtesy between members, its moderation, and sectional generosity. The Supervisors representing the two ends of the county, which for two years past have been virtually at war, have by their fairness toward each other, and their candid consideration of all matters of sectional interest, done more for the general good of the county than has been done by any Board for the past four years. Our eastern friends were fair and just in their treatment of this end, and we heartily rejoice that this feeling was reciprocated by the Supervisors of western Town ships. The chasm is closed between the sections. Let it remain so.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.—Weare unable to publish the full proceeding of the Board of Supervisors this week, but give a synopsis of their business:

The Board voted to pay the bridge boards in accordance with the vote of the people last spring.

John Monroe was granted the privilege of putting a dam across the Jordan river, but requiring him to put in a fish ladder and a shoot 100 feet long and fourteen feet wide for boats and rafts, and compelling him to put boats over at his own expense.

The salaries of county officers were raised to the amounts paid previous to their reduction last fall.

Five hundred dollars were appropriated to build roads in Townships of Springvale and Melrose.

THE INDIAN WAR IN COLORADO.

General Merritt's Command Reaches the Seat of War and Relieves the Beleaguered Party—Full Details of the Engagement on the 25th ult.—The Troops Made a Brave Stand and Fought Desperately—The Killed and Wounded.

CHEYENNE, Wy. T., October 2.

BATTLEFIELD 5, MILK RIVER, Col., }
October 2, 12 p. m. }

A courier will leave camp this evening, with dispatches for Rawlins. The Indians did not pursue us, and gave us no effective fire from a commanding hight at a distance of from five hundred yards, having a crossfire upon our position, which position was chosen mainly on account of water.

All our horses and all but twelve mules have been killed. We recovered them at best we could with wagons, but no sacrifice to get them.

Captain Dodge and Lieutenant Hughes, with Company B, Ninth Cavalry, came to our rescue yesterday morning at daybreak, after a night's march of thirty-five miles from Fortification Rock. Owen upon these rear the alarm was brought to us that the Indians were coming. A bull in the firing enabled us to mount and shelter their horses as soon as possible, owing to the fortifications which we had thrown up during the night. Had the heights been accessible, Captain Dodge would have charged them with his company, which we covered him from our fortifications but this was impossible, the ascent being nearly perpendicular.

As that point we had to abandon the dead as we kept a good lookout from the loop-holes, and began to fire upon them with a perfect hail-storm. This, however, was a very rare occurrence, as the Indians have discipline and keep under cover.

Early that day, over here but three of Captain Dodge's command was shot down. A very fortunate thing for us was that the Indians have left us unmolested at night, with the exception of an occasional shot to make us realize serious pain.

We have plenty of ammunition, at great risk, to build our dead animals every night; otherwise the Indians would be upon us.

A scarcity is made every night for water, a distance of 2,000 yards. Our first detail, consisting of Sergt. Jay Hall, Private Rauch, of Company B, Ninth Cavalry, and Private Hall, of Company F, Fifth Cavalry, were fired upon by the Indians as they approached the water. The Indians are mostly a few yards in front of us, and shelter their horses in the ravines.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLIAM A. SMITH, PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1879.

For President in 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

For Governor,

OUR GADIX LITTLET.

New York, Oct. 15 1879.

It seems we are about to have a new attraction in the way of Zoological Gardens which are to eclipse the famous popular resorts where the natives of creation make themselves acquainted with wild and curious birds, beasts, reptiles and fishes, in London, Paris or Berlin. A regular run was opened on the Wall street people and capital was subscribed quickly for the project in time without letting them have a chance in the pie. Two million dollars have been raised by the "Universal Conservatory and Zoological Garden Company" which is as such, consists so far of quite a limited number of very wealthy people. They have bought three or three acres of ground between 155th and 159th streets, 8th Nicholas avenue and the Harlem River, within view of High Bridge, the Croton Aqueduct and the Park scene of almost daily regattas and pleasure sailing, boating and canoeing. Eminent engineers and artists have been engaged to lay out the grounds, and a small army of workmen will shortly be busily employed in carrying out their instructions. Besides beautiful gardens and the inclosures for the animals, there will be a lake and island, an arcade for stores of all kinds, quite an imposing architectural affair, restaurants, billiard halls, bowling alleys, Swiss cottages, and other attractions innumerable. In fact it seems determined to draw all the people to the north end of Manhattan Island next year, and away from Coney Island. The result probable will be that both will be largely patronized, as good times are now on us, no better proof being required to show it than the such investments of prudent business men. What the circus people must think of all the sort of thing can only be surmised. The shining menageries are familiar enough now, but can scarcely hold their own against a really valuable permanent collection and for many miles in the vicinity of New York even the most accomplished of country persons will neglect to pay up a few dollars, and be New York and its wonders, rather than vegetate at home and contribute to the casual circus.

The O'Leary walking match has been dragging on in a melancholy way. It is very evident public interest in this particulary form of trying the utmost limit of man's endurance is fast dying out. In this instance, so many started that it was simply bewildering to even try to keep any track of them, and accordingly people were content to try. Men dropped out, and nobody cared; others stay in, and nine out of ten can't tell the names of half of them. The bulletin boards of the daily papers, round which great crowds gathered at the last champion match, have been deserted, except by comparatively small throngs of idle persons, most of whom occupy the parks as loll chambers in summer weather. The suspicions of hippodroming, with all that the term implies, raised by the short track last time, Rowell's alleged illness by swimming, and other similar incidents (some of the most famous of the most brazen broken down very early in the struggle), have had much to do with the growing distaste among respectable people for such performances. In homely phrase the thing has been run into the ground, and the inquiry is made whether this spurring on a fellow creature to exertions that are felt a brute is much less brutal than a good old-fashioned prize fight, where the combatants' countenances would be marred in a jelly, but the agony was over much sooner.

The dentists are busy now. Two dreadful cases of malformed jaws just revealed fatality. In the one case, the captain of a canal boat had his tooth extracted so unskillfully, and the bleeding so carelessly stopped, that it broke out afresh and could not be checked. The poor fellow died in agony. In the other case, which occurred the next day, a well known actress of Brooklyn by the name of Grannary, who had been famed for mechanical by a dentist in Boston, and another in New York, the treatment consisting, it is believed, in the unskilful insertion of a plug or pointed pencil of arsenic, suffered necrosis of the jaw bone, one of the physicians who attended her, the most painful death that ever came to a man. The torture of the middle ages could scarcely bear comparison with the agonies the wretched victim endured. I spare you the unpleasant details. Something so appalling has naturally excited wide interest, and a warm controversy is now going on in the papers. There is no doubt many unskilful dentists are shamefully ignorant of anything beyond the mere mechanics of the profession. Still, it is not fair to jump to the conclusion that all dentists are quacks and fools, because some are. Many are quite accomplished and perfectly reliable persons.

It rarely seems a jury that a sane people should grow so rich that they don't know how much money they've got, and get so lazy too find out. Another case of an employee rewarded in this way has come to light. The man was trusted, of course, they all are—and was the usual, though not unusual manager of a large umbrella manufacturing house. He quietly walked off with $50,000, which he had appropriated during a term of years. Nobody missed the money, and he might have gone on stealing if he had if he hadn't got tired of work, or fig-ured about the almost impossible detection of his misdeeds. He had been speculating, another concurrent weakness of such gentry.

The cumbrous wheels has turned at last obviously in the prisons and Cecil Williams is at the moment again under trial with the likelihood of getting a little the worst of the present encounter. He is charged with assaulting and using gross language to a reporter. The press is the one thing he had hitherto shown common sense enough to leave alone. It is a match for his club. Another officer of the less exalted grade of policeman has been found in damages to the sum of $2,500 for false arrest. In his case, too, it was a newspaper man he unwisely fell across. Reporters are either with a lady whom he was escorting from the opera were humming snatches of the music. The policemen ordered them to stop, and outrageously insulted the lady. The gentlemen remonstated and were promptly arrested and lashed up all night, and was discharged the next morning.

The fashion writers tell us we are again to be afflicted with the miseries to eyes and shins of hoopskirts. Ladies' dresses have really been very becoming and sensible the last two years, and why Lee should listen will insist on inventing forms of ugliness to be worn for fashion's sake is what everyone is "one of them things no fellow can understand." The latest craze of the young and lovely is to meander through the streets with broad belts of coarse canvas or webbing with buckle-leather straps and iron buckles, for all he world like the surcingle of a saddle!

The American Institute Fair, which formally opened a short time ago, is now in full swing, and really looks better than ever before. This is becoming a stereotyped expression, but it is literally the only one possible. So steady and improvement can be noticed in few displays in human ingenuity. It is one of the oldest of our institutions, and the father of the eminently successful fairs held so wildly all over the continent, for since our manufacturers have invaded Mexico and the Brazilians are going to hold a permanent fair at Rio de Janeiro under the immediate patronage of the Emperor, we may fairly admit our neighbors south of our frontier to a share of the credit for enterprise all America should enjoy.

RAIL.

The post office department has received a letter from the postmaster at Minneapolis, Minnesota, stating that an excellent and pious old citizen complained very indignantly because the religious journal he takes has been stamped by the postal authorities "second class matter." The old gentleman denounces this as an outrage, claiming that the manner in the said religious paper is strictly first class, and he wanted the postmaster to write to the department about it. The postal authorities should solemnly and faithfully notify the indignant Minnesotian that this outrage on his favorite religious journal is decided by a postal law passed by a congress with a democratic majority in it! The democratic party is notoriously "down" on religious papers.

Genial Charley Dana is the same sunny, cheerful fellow that he was before he went to Europe. Even the surprising fact that the people of Europe who made so much of that fellow Grant didn't know that Dana was among them, or knowing, didn't care if he was, did not change his bitterness disposition. As to the head of affairs in New York, Mr. Dana observes that times a politician is more of a gentleman than Mayor Cooper.

Gen. Grant will probably be the Republican candidate next year. All the signs indicate it. There is no question about this republican. Though he would repel some independent voters, there is no other candidate who would excite so much enthusiasm. The party managers see this, and feel that the natural result is inevitable. They believe that the masses will wade through fire and blood to vote for Grant, but for no other candidate. Besides, it cannot be denied that the party has grown very Stalwart. She South has not responded as it ought to have done to the moderate, constitutional policy of Mr. Hayes, and King Stork will be sent in place of King Log. That is the way some of the Stalwarts talk. They may be disappointed. Should Gen Grant be nominated, he would probably be elected. The chances are, that his Administration would be cleaner and more conservative than before. At any rate, the layout rule is abandoned, and will not be resumed. What will the Democrats do? They have done all in their power to make Gen. Grant the Republican candidate. Will they also contribute to his election? If they would not, they must adopt some policy besides hanging back. They cannot afford to bear the suspicion that they propose to vote upon the settlement of the war question, or that they are indifferent to human rights. They cannot win by a Solid South against a Solid North. Their only hope is in a patriotic candidate and policy. The indications that they will be wise enough to use this are not very flattering. Both parties seem disposed to take narrow views, and this is in favor of the Republicans, for they resound to the prejudices of the larger section.

A correspondent in the New York Post, who has spent many years at the south, says that the best immediate remedy for the south is "the union of the great north; a sweeping election of the Republican party, that shall completely blast all hope that a few rebellious spirits of the south shall yet get control of this country and compensate themselves for the bloody war which they forced upon the patriotic people of the land."—[Exchange.

Senator Chandler made his first speech in the Massachusetts campaign at Worcester, on Wednesday evening. An audience of 4,000 people gathered to hear him, and cheered him lustily from the beginning to the end. His speech was thoroughly radical, and was spiced with many hits at Butler and Greenbackism. Senator Hoar preceded, and gave Mr. Chandler a reception at his house after the meeting.—[N. Y. Tribune.

I must tell you of a conversation I overheard on the beach at Newport between two children who were playing in the sand together. The small boy said to the little girl: "Do you wish to be my little wife?" The little girl made reflecting answer—"Yes——" The small boy: "Then take off my hoop!"

The Buffalo Express says Zach Chandler's bold but favorite speech on the ill-omened accountancy of the confederates in to cause did more to fire the northern heart with a new outburst of patriotic loyalty than almost anything else that has happened since the down fall of the rebellion

The New Orleans Democrat hopes the rebel leaders in congress will abolish the rank of general as to get rid of that pestilent disturber and obstructer of the peaceful relation of the two recently warring sections of the country, Gen. Sherman.

The Allegan, Mich. Journal floats from its masthead the following banner: "For President in 1880—Zachariah Chandler." There may be a boom to this yet.—[Washington Republican.

The Philadelphia Times which in 1876 supported Tilden to the best of its limited ability, now says his election would be "the greatest possible calamity that could happen to the party or the country."

There now! you Ohio Democrats can see how utterly the Democratic party breaks down when it tries to get on without Tilden and his barrel. Yes; and now just keep your eyes on New York a few weeks, and you will see how utterly the Democratic party breaks down when it tries to get on with Tilden and his barrel.

It was announced on the 6th that the Government Sub-Treasuries were all supplied with gold coin, thus paying Hoant freely on our five-twenties.

A PETITION has recently been rendered to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court praying for the first issues in Pittsburgh during the great railroad strike. The Court heads Allegheny County Banks for the default of their officers in the case brought before it.

THE base-ball season for 1879 is drawing to a close. The Boston Club won the championship games, the Providence Club the second best and the Chicago third. Providence won fifty-five out of seventy-eight games, Boston forty-nine out of seventy-seven, and Chicago forty-five out of seventy-seven.

ON the 5th, at San Francisco, Professor Coupler and C. B. Williams made a balloon ascension. When about two hundred feet in the balloon collapsed, and both occupants were precipitated to the ground. They suffered injuries from which they died within an hour.

A FEW days ago John Murphy drove Baron on Rainbow's private track, near New York City, a mile in two minutes and eleven and a half seconds. Edwin Forrest was also timed driven a mile in precisely the same time.

ACCORDING to Chicago dailies of the 8th a balloon, supposed to be the missing Pathfinder (Wise's balloon), was seen over Station thirty miles distant from Chicago, by Louis Fisher, an engineer on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad. He and the operator at the depot saw the balloon quite distinctly about midnight, as it was sailing brightly. The steadily was less than a mile away, and appeared to be sailing in a westerly direction. The country nearly toward the lake shore is only about half a mile from Miller Station. A fireman on Mr. Fisher's engine drove the balloon, and corroborated the above statement.

THE American Humane Association met in annual convention at Chicago on the 9th. An expert report was made on the treatment of dumb animals when shipped to rail, and the alleged abuses of animals in transit were largely denied. An elementary fund of $5,000 was recommended to be expended in the formation of societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in cities where organizations did not already exist.

Personal and Political.

THE official vote of California for Governor at the late election was as follows: Perkins, Republican, 79,963; Glenn, Democrat, 47,560; White, Workingman, 44,836. In the legislature the Republicans have about twelve majority on joint ballot.

Dunscomb, for Lieutenant-Governor; General Ames, Aboolition, for Secretary of State; Daniel N. Stillings, for State Treasurer; Wm. R. Field, for Auditor, and Richard O'Neil for Attorney-General. Three members of one family had died and much alarm existed. Only four cases and no deaths were reported at Grenada. A physician and nurses were applied for at Memphis, and in response two physicians, two nurses and President, of the Board of Health Langstaff started at once on a special train, but they were intercepted and stopped at the Mississippi line, the President of the Board of Health of Bolivar County peremptorily refusing to allow the train to run through that county, and the party were compelled to return to Memphis.

Ohio Rolls Up 20,000 Republican Majority!

Iowa Goes Republican by 25,000 Majority!

Republican Increase of 13,000 in Iowa Over 1878!

A Tremendous Republican Victory.

The Republicans of Ohio have recorded a great victory, the greatest since the election of Grant seven years ago. They have carried the State by a majority that will not fall below 17,000, and may reach 20,000. The election gives the Republicans a majority of thirty-five on joint ballot in the Legislature. Heavy Republican gains are reported in scores of Democratic strongholds, with none and there a Republican elected to the legislature where none but Democrats have been elected for several years past.

The victory goes far toward settling the presidential contest of next year. It takes Ohio firmly in the column of Republican States. It points a solid road. It expresses a solid reason Republican triumph in New York. It puts the "Ohio idea" of the Democratic party, and marks the end of the rag baby fiat-money heresy. It destroys Thurman's hopes for the Democratic presidential nomination. It relegates Thurman from the senate, and assures the election of a Republican successor, who will take his seat in the senate at the opening of the next congress, in 1881. It makes nearly certain the election of a Republican house next year, and fairly probable that the senate will be Republican again in two years. It will permanently retire from public life both Thurman and Evans. It will probably largely change the Democratic programme in congress next winter. It administers a stern rebuke to the sectarian Democracy of the old south. The contemptible lengths will hardly be set limited hereafter as the road back of law. It will inspire the Republicans of the north with renewed hope and courage.

The best and clearest of the magnificent victories of the united Republican electors in Ohio was by the conspirators to make trouble among the leaders of the Democratic party in that state. In 1875, when Hayes was governor, his Democratic opponent was Allen, Democrat, was 5,111. That year, Forney's majority over Bishop was scarcely over 2,000. In 1876, Hayes's majority over Tilden was 7,516. This year the Republican majority is over 20,000. In 1877, Bishop's Democratic majority was 22,520. Now the Republicans have a large majority in Congress as well as the Democrats. In 1878, last year, the Republican majority over the Democratic for secretary of state was 3,154. This year the Republican majority is over 20,000.

The full returns from Iowa give a majority of 15,808 over all the three other parties combined, and a Republican gain of 27,000 over 1877, and 15,000 over 1878. In the Legislature, the Republicans have elected 76 out of 99 Senators, and 80 out of 100 Representatives.

DASHED TO DEATH.

Particulars of the Late Balloon Accident at San Francisco.

Yesterday was a windy day; a strong West wind came in over the western hills, driving the dust about the streets and whistling around corners, and many of the large crowd which congregated at Woods's to see the aerial trip advertised by Professor Colgrove, a gentleman who has made seven ascensions from the gardens during the past summer, would be postponed until a more favorable time. The previous wind, however, seemed not to cause any apprehension on the part of the aeronaut, and shortly after noon the monster balloon "General Grant" was brought out into the open space near the animal's dens, and in the presence of the crowd the filling began. Professor Colgrove was present, apparently entertaining no intention of abandoning the trip, directing the inflating process, which was in charge of Thomas Abbott, and conversing with those inside the inclosure. It had been announced that a young man employed by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s bank would accompany the aeronaut, but no hour before the ascension he backed out, and a message necessary to provide a substitute. Professor Martin, the well-known balloonist, was one of the many present, and at this stage of the proceedings, and owing to the wind, he advised Colgrove not to attempt the trip, prophesying an accident if he did. Colgrove, however, refused to entertain the idea, and it was finally arranged that Orrin T. Williams, the manager of the gardens, who was present, should go with him in lieu of the passenger first proposed. He and Colgrove were assistants, as he was a heavy, stout man, weighing fully two hundred pounds, and should not run the risk. When Williams informed Mr. Abbott that he was going, the latter told him, in a joking manner, that he had better leave part of himself on the ground, Williams replied jocularly: "No, I am going to take all of myself up." Although Mr. Williams had arranged for a large number of assessments from the gardens, he had never before contemplated a trip himself, and, while the preparations were being made, he remarked to a newspaper man in the crowd: "You ought to give this an extra inch of space on my account." This was about the last remark he made, and in a few moments after Colgrove stepped into the basket and called for his companion.

At this time, about fifteen minutes to four o'clock, the wind was blowing a gale, and the balloon, which is the largest air-ship ever on this coast, was swaying violently to and fro in the effort to release itself from the ropes which bound it to the earth. Williams sprang into the basket. An instant before Colgrove gave the word to cut the air-ship loose, he was seen to make a sign to us though to step out, but the ropes were suddenly released, and the balloon mounted into the air. It seemed at once to carry one in the crowd that it was too heavily freighted, and although it rapidly shot about 150 feet above the ground it did not do so as quickly as usual. From this instance the balloon rose slowly to perhaps 500 feet, when, feeling affected, it began slowly to sink. At the moment of reaching the highest altitude it was struck by a strong southwest current and moved off slowly in a southeasterly direction, all the while gradually descending. From this time until the men were thrown from the basket to one upon the ground in the gardens could see the balloon. Henry Dinsmus, the proprietor of the establishment in the amphitheater, was standing in the door of the pavilion at this time, and saw the air-ship from the moment it left the gardens until the accident. His story is to the effect that as soon as the balloon began to descend he was conscious that a terrible accident would happen, and, therefore, from his elevated position he watched it closely.

It passed over Mission street at a height of about one hundred and fifty feet, and by the time Howard street was reached it had descended so near the earth that it struck the telegraph wires on the left side of that street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth, violently. The contact was made between the gas-bag and the basket. For a moment the balloon remained in this position, spinning around rapidly, both the occupants of the basket being thrown right and left. This was only for the pens a moment after, and the balloon, free again, proceeded on its way. The contact with the wires was sufficiently severed some of the ropes attaching the basket with the gas-bag, for as the air-ship shot across Howard street the aeronauts were seen clinging to the sides of the basket, which was tipped up sideways. On the east side of Howard street the gas-bag struck the chimney of a house on the corner of Fourteenth street, and tore it down.

Between Howard and Folsom there is a large vacant lot, extending the entire block, and after demolishing the chimney the balloon swept across this vacant space like an arrow, the bag twisting itself into every shape and jerking the basket in every direction with great violence. While passing over this lot Williams was seen standing up in the basket and clinging to the sundered ropes. Colgrove was apparently engaging the upward side of the basket. By this time the balloon reached Folsom street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, the basket was hanging by not more than one rope, and was just a little nigher in the air than the telegraph wires running along the west side of the road. At this moment Williams was seen to fall like a shot to the earth, and a few seconds after the basket came down with Colgrove. About six feet from the ground the latter pitched head first from the basket. Both rose to within ten feet of each other. Williams struck upon the top of his head and was killed instantly. Colgrove struck upon his back and lived about an hour. The whole affair transpired inside of fifteen minutes.—San Francisco Call.

A Blind Beggar—How He Was Prepared for a Life of Mendicancy.

Among the most familiar objects upon the thoroughfares calculated to gain public sympathy and loosen the by passers' purse-strings has been an old blind man who generally selected Fifth avenue for his resort. With a venerable beard, skin wrinkled and drawn over the bone like leather, and sightless eyeballs, which had that strange, ghastly look seen only in those souls of Southern Europe whom a dreadful process has prepared for a life of mendicancy, this old beggar has more frequently than most of his class won the pity and the pennies of those whom he encountered. Around his neck was hung a scroll with the inscription, "Ladies and gents, please help the blind," and he was always led along by a little Italian boy, with bright eyes, and olive pale face. The pair have more than once been hustled about by the police, but recently the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children had its attention called to the case. On Wednesday evening Officer Chiardi came upon the blind beggar and his protege on Fifth avenue, near Fourteenth street. He told the boy to take the old man home or he would be arrested. Seemingly frightened, they started on their way, but loitered along. Not so long thought, sauced for Chiardi to get out of sight, until he lost all patience with them. It had taken them more than an hour to go three blocks, when he came up on the corner of Eleventh street and had a police officer arrest them. As they started for the station house the old beggar fumbled about nervously and called to the boy. The latter was allowed to go along behind him, and evidently in ignorance of Chiardi's knowledge of Italian, he fell to directing his guide how to act, using that language for his purpose.

"Peter—Peter Vellon!" he mumbled, to Officer Chiardi noted yesterday, "say nothing, boy. Do not speak a word. Above all, say not who we are or where we live. You hear me?"

The boy assented, but the mendicant had already furnished the listening officer with his plan of action, and before producing his prisoners in court yesterday Chiardi was able to inform himself about them. The developments furnished another revelation of the horrors of padronism. The beggar's name is Nicoli Vianelli. He is now quite an old man, but during most of his life has led the strange, roaming existence of the professional beggar. He came here from the town of Spilinbi, in the province of Basilicata, Italy. There, it was alleged, a contract had been made with some one who held him as a bondsman to transfer him to one Giuseppi Luigi to beg on the streets of this city. His Italian bear, Mr. F. returned to his horse, and, calling to his cousin, Mr. T. Fancher, resumed the chase. With the aid of a stick he possessed himself of the end of the rope, which was about thirty feet in length, and fastened it to the saddle. Now began the frantic movements of the bear in his savage efforts to release himself. He plunged in every direction, nearly throwing the horse, and showing evident intention to free himself at all hazards. But his captor managed to retain his prisoner, and at the same time keep his horse out of the way of the savage brute until a shot from the six-shooter of his cousin ended the combat. The force-pax exhibited by Mr. Fancher, and left with us, is the biggest ever seen in this region, and indicates, so old hunters tell us, that the bear, in good condition, would have weighed six hundred pounds.—*Baytar (Tex.) Improvements in Gates.

It is generally supposed that a journal ostensibly devoted to scientific interests lacks romance and sentiment. The antipathy lover whose mistress has frowned on him, may experience the opinion that he is a tiresome nuisance, never thinks of writing to the editor of the Scientific Yankee or the Mechanical Gazette for consolation and advice; and no fortunate lover would dream of sending the minutes of those journals for hints as to the best method of convincing the old gentleman that the two hands were better than one in the suit, or that the gas turned itself down to a conveniently dim point. And yet it is in the columns of a scientific journal that a young man first read a notice of an improvement in gates, patented by a Wisconsin person, which, combining certain novel features of construction, whereby the gate was adapted for swinging in either direction, and may be raised to clear obstructions, as it need hardly be pointed out that this improvement was made in the sole interest of lovers, and that the scientific journal in question was obviously actuated by the noblest motives in giving publicity to it.

It is in our Western States that the front gate has reached its highest development as an aid to courtship. As is well known, there are two schools, which either prefer in their theory of the true method of using the gate. The Concord school, of which Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson is the leader, holds that both the young man and the young woman should lean on the same side of the gate—the inner side being regarded as preferable. The Western school, on the other hand, insists that the young lady should lean on the inside of the gate while her lover leans on the outside. Though the Concord school lacks a leader of the fame and importance of Mr. Emerson, it has by far the greater number of adherents, and to the unprejudiced mind there can be but little doubt that its doctrine is the true one.

It is easy to comprehend how the front gate originally came into use. The original pair of lovers who first noticed it had doubtless sought a place where they could enjoy privacy, and, at the same time, secure, while yet afar off, the unsympathetic approach of the disturbing small-boy. The locality of the front gate, commanding as it does a full view of the house from which the father may emerge with his heartless load, and the public street, along which the casual small-boy may send his whistling way, would naturally be selected even by lovers wholly without engineering instincts. Experience soon showed that the front gate possessed other unequal strategic advantages. To the eyes of the public the lover on the outside of the gate always seemed to be in the act of going away. When any one except the avenging father drew near, the lover would remark, "Well, as I was saying, I must really go;" and then, when the objectionable person had passed on, the sweet sorrow of prolonged parting could begin again and last until the appearance of an elderly gentleman with a club at the front door seemed to point to the propriety of an immediate and real parting.

Swinging on the gate is the peculiar privilege of lovers who have gained the approbation of the parental authorities, and who are filled with an ecstasy which finds its only satisfactory expression in the rhythmic motion of a strong and wide-swinging gate. The Western improvement, by means of which the gate is made to swing in either direction, of course doubles its capacity and increases in the same proportion the bliss of its occupants. The other improvement described by the scientific journal as a device for raising the gate so as to clear obstructions—such as wheelbarrows or an intoxicated father —may also prove to be of very great value. It is always awkward to climb down from a gate and misunderstand, in all the pausing "obstruction," whoever he may be, has passed through it, and the necessity of so doing at a moment's notice has in more than one instance resulted in a disarrangement of the female back-hair and the laceration of the masculine hand by the bloodwired pin with which thoughtless waist-belts are only too often fastened.

There is still room for further improvements in gates. For example, a gate with seats on either side, and a curved and upholstered rail in the place of the rude unfeeling pickets now in general use, would command enthusiastic approval. Now that the scientific press has taken the matter up, we may confidently look for a wisher and greater development of the front gate, and with it a corresponding increase in the happiness of youth, and the frequency of early marriages.—N. Y. Times.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Various remedies have from time to time been proposed to arrest the ravages of insects which destroy books and printed papers. There are obvious objections to the use of such antidotes as washing with a solution of corrosive sublimate in alcohol, exposing the books to the vapor of benzine, carbolic acid, hydrocyanic acid, or burning sulphur Dr. Hagen has tried with success to meet the difficulty by keeping the infested volumes for an hour under the exhausted bell-glass of an air-pump.

—It is now proposed to manufacture bricks entirely of pure flint, without the admixture of alumula, or any other substance, to detract in any degree from the complete refractory character of the material. In this operation, the plan is to grind the flints in such a manner as to produce from them, when in a pulverized condition, bricks or blocks of the greatest attainable density and strength and durability, according to the various fire-resisting properties, to the best descriptions of fire-clay fabrics. The material when formed resembles a fine-grained freestone, and is sufficiently hard to resist the action of the weather. It is in furnace work and similar applications, however, that bricks made in this manner are expected to prove most successful.—Scientific Exchange.

—Owing to the difficulty and expense of obtaining a good dry meter, wet gas meters are still largely in use, and the question as to what the liquid should be is an important one. Water is, perhaps, the worst possible filling—it freezes in winter and evaporates in summer—and is free from the former disadvantage, but not from the latter. Glycerine, according to the Scientific American, is better than either. A mixture of chloride of magnesium has also been tried and found to be excellent when the gas is free from ammonia, which is, unfortunately, seldom the case. Gasoline has tried chloride of magnesium, and found that when there is only a small quantity of ammonia in one hundred cubic meters of gas, serious results follow in a few months. A part of the salt is decomposed, forming sal ammoniac, which continues with a second portion of the former to form a double salt, magnesia being precipitated as white powder on the clock-work and wheels. The double salt subsequently decomposes, liberating hydrochloric acid. Chloride of magnesia is most effective in purifying gas from ammonia.

—Machine strops of what—is a German query—are now coming into market as a substitute for leather. These belts are made of the best crucible steel wire, in transverse network of one to ten wires, in any desired number of width. The two ends of the strap are joined like the middle, so that there is no beginning or end to the strop, the belt forming an endless band. The wires run parallel only across the width, in such a manner that one encircles into the other like a spiral, a continuous, densely-woven chain being thus produced, the impossibility of which is so great as to enable it to give round the smallest pulley. The straps are sometimes made with leather or elastic lining, or bordered with leather, gutta-percha, or other material, also its interstices filled with gutta-percha, to supply elastic bands with cushion and web, and to prevent their stretching. The tightening of the strap—shortening of the chain—which is only necessary once, viz., when put on by means of a strap key, may be effected very easily and engineering lustines. Experience soon showed that the front gate possessed other unequal strategic advantages. To the eyes of the public the lover on the outside of the gate always seemed to be in the act of going away. When any one except the avenging father drew near, the lover would remark, "Well, as I was saying, I must really go;" and then, when the objectionable person had passed on, the sweet sorrow of prolonged parting could begin again and last until the appearance of an elderly gentleman with a club at the front door seemed to point to the propriety of an immediate and real parting.

Jr. a Paris Bank.

The American Register (Paris) says: To one accustomed to our quick, business movements in New York, and the especial rapidity with which our banking operations are performed, it is quite ludicrous to enter a Paris bank and watch the performances there. If you present a check for payment, instead of handing it directly to the teller and getting your money instantly, or in two or three minutes at the latest (as in a New York bank), you walk up to an official in uniform, of whom there are a dozen walking about the counting-room, in large banks like the Credit Lyonnais, outside the space reserved for the clerks.

He examines it, and, if one of the pieces constructed like owls, in which the bookkeepers are serving out a sentence of solitary confinement. You hand your check to the prisoner's assistant, who takes it to the "boss." The latter consults a big ledger. If there is sufficient "running account" to the credit of the drawer, and the signature has all its i's crossed, and its t's dotted, he returns it to the boy, who in turn hands it to you with the request that you pay your name for a revenue stamp. This being gummed on the back, the deputy-prisoner asks your address, then informs it was tied to his back of the draft, and you write your name across the revenue stamp with the back-note and the laceration of the masculine hand by the bloodwired pin with which thoughtless waist-belts are only too often fastened.

There is still room for further improvements in gates. For example, a gate with seats on either side, and a curved and upholstered rail in the place of the rude unfeeling pickets now in general use, would command enthusiastic approval. AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Sponge Cake.—One cup sugar, three eggs, three tablespoons hot water, one cup flour, one teaspoon cream tartar, half teaspoon soda; beat the yolks and sugar together until light, add the water, then the flour sifted with the cream tartar and soda, then the whites beaten to a stiff froth, and bake in a moderate oven.

Mayonnaise Sauce.—Put into a bowl the yolk of one raw egg, one level teaspoonful each of salt and dry mustard, one teaspoonful of sugar, a little pepper, the juice of half a lemon, and two tablespoonfuls of salad oil; beat all together with a silver fork, adding the oil a little at a time, one cup of boiling water. When this is smooth set off the fire, add seasoning, and two spoonfuls of vinegar. Set on to cool, and when cold put in a quarter of a tablespoonful of pepper, and as much cayenne pepper as can be taken upon the blade of a small penknife. Add the yolks of two raw eggs, three tablespoonfuls of salad oil, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, and stir well together as before. This is also known by the name of Salad Dressing.

Dutchesse Loaves.—Roll a quart of potatoes mash them through a fine cullender, mix in a pint of flour, with them one ounce of butter, the yolks of two eggs, a teaspoonful of salt, half a wineglassful of yeast, and enough milk to make a stiff paste. Let it stand to rise for an hour, then roll out on a floured board, cut into cakes, and bake in a quick oven.

Cake vs. Root Houses.

Throughout all the newer portions of the West, root crops, from the lack of cellars, occasioned from the want of drainage, are often imperfectly preserved. That there should be a failure to some natural cause in the case of those that in building the house the lack of stone and the want of time to cut a drain, and the necessity of filling the same prevent this important adjunct, a good cellar, being made. That from year to year the family supplies of vegetables and fruits must be kept from the severe cold, either to be termed root houses. In many cases the land is such that easy drainage is not feasible, and that an underground cellar is not possible. In this case, the sooner a severe frost house is built the more will be saved, since it is not pleasant to get the daily supplies from pits that can hardly in this way be kept secure from freezing.

In making a root house where timber is handy all that is necessary is to excavate to such a depth more or less as the location may be dry. Wall this up with logs to a height from the bottom sufficient to easily stand upright, and of an area sufficient to hold the supply. Fasten securely over all, a roofing of logs securely chinked and pitching both ways. Cover all with earth, top and sides, two feet thick, fit in tight double doors, with as few spaces between each set thing will be in danger of freezing.

The surplus stock of potatoes, etc., for sale may be easily kept in pits either under ground or entirely above ground, as the case may be. If the soil will admit, dig pits three feet wide and of any requisite length, though it is better not to have more than one hundred bushels of roots in one pit. Cover the bottom and sides of the pit with 6—[illegible] feet of straw, and fill the long straw, filling with the roots to the surface, rounding them up naturally, cover with hay or straw, then six inches of earth, then another layer of litter six inches deep, then six to eight inches more of earth, well beaten and rubbed down. This will keep the roots from freezing in any winter. If the latitude is severe, put on top of the ground the piles should be about four feet wide and as high as they will lie nicely. Cover with four inches of straw, and with eight inches of earth, then with six inches of straw not again with eight inches of earth.

In the case of potatoes put in green from the field, ventilation should be secured to the moisture of sweating may pass off easily. Instead, the pits should not be covered at first until this sweat has been gone through. Hence it is better in the potatoes, beets, rutabagas and other roots be left only lightly covered, just so as to be secure from rain, until about the time of hard weather, when they may have their final coverage.

So far as keeping is concerned, there is no reason why any family may not keep roots uniformly good in pits than in ordinary cellars. Nevertheless, pits are more liable to thaw out during long, rather than rely, and then from a knife into rather small cakes, two inches long and one inch wide. Lay them on a tin pan, and bake a delicate over the top with white of egg, and color them golden brown in a moderate oven.

Wall this up with logs to a height from the bottom sufficient to easily stand upright, and of an area sufficient to hold the supply. Fasten securely over all, a roofing of logs securely chinked and pitching both ways. Cover all with earth, top and sides, two feet thick, fit in tight double doors, with as few spaces between each set thing will be in danger of freezing.

The surplus stock of potatoes, etc., for sale may be easily kept in pits either under ground or entirely above ground, as the case may be. If the soil will admit, dig pits three feet wide and of any requisite length, though it is better not to have more than one hundred bushels of roots in one pit. Cover the bottom and sides of the pit with 6—[illegible] feet of straw, and fill with the long straw, filling with the roots to the surface, rounding them up naturally, cover with hay or straw, then six inches of earth, then another layer of litter six inches deep, then six to eight inches more of earth, well beaten and rubbed down. This will keep the roots from freezing in any winter. If the latitude is severe, put on top of the ground the piles should be about four feet wide and as high as they will lie nicely. Cover with four inches of straw, and with eight inches of earth, then with six inches of straw not again with eight inches of earth.

In the case of potatoes put in green from the field, ventilation should be secured to the moisture of sweating may pass off easily. Instead, the pits should not be covered at first until this sweat has been gone through. Hence it is better in the potatoes, beets, rutabagas and other roots be left only lightly covered, just so as to be secure from rain, until about the time of hard weather, when they may have their final coverage.

So far as keeping is concerned, there is no reason why any family may not keep roots uniformly good in pits than in ordinary cellars. Nevertheless, pits are more liable to thaw out during long, rather than rely, and then from a knife into rather small cakes, two inches long and one inch wide. Lay them on a tin pan, and bake a delicate over the top with white of egg, and color them golden brown in a moderate oven.

Mayonnaise Sauce.—Put into a bowl the yolk of one raw egg, one level teaspoonful each of salt and dry mustard, one teaspoonful of sugar, a little pepper, the juice of half a lemon, and two tablespoonfuls of salad oil; beat all together with a silver fork, adding the oil a little at a time, one cup of boiling water. When this is smooth set off the fire, add seasoning, and two spoonfuls of vinegar. Set on to cool, and when cold put in a quarter of a tablespoonful of pepper, and as much cayenne pepper as can be taken upon the blade of a small penknife. Add the yolks of two raw eggs, three tablespoonfuls of salad oil, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, and stir well together as before. This is also known by the name of Salad Dressing.

Dutchesse Loaves.—Boil a quart of potatoes; mash them through a fine cullender, mix in a pint of flour, with them one ounce of butter, the yolks of two raw eggs, a teaspoonful of salt, half a wineglassful of yeast, and enough milk to make a stiff paste. Let it stand to rise for an hour, then roll out on a floured board, cut into cakes, and bake in a quick oven.

A Strange Meeting.

The truth of the adage that "Truth is stranger than fiction," was probably never more forcibly illustrated than in a family meeting and reunion which was completed yesterday. The name of the family is Jones, and they hail from Marshintown, Iowa. About nineteen years ago when the Pike's Peak excitement was at its climax, the elder Mess. Jones, the father of the family, left Marshintown for the purpose of bettering his fortune in the gold fields of Colorado. He was accompanied by his wife and family, but left his family in very unfavorable circumstances. Day after day his simple letters and friends looked for news from the absent man, but none came. At last he was given up for dead and his heirs were supposed to be lying on the prairies of Kansas or in the limited cemetery of some mining camp.

Among the family left behind were three children, the youngest a set of twins. The latter proved to be endowed with natural talents for music and learned to play on various instruments. About ten years ago Jack Jones, the eldest brother, disappeared in a mysterious way, and, after the usual time days' search, was forgotten. In September, 1878, one of the twin brothers emigrated to Kansas City, and, liking the location, sent for the other. The twins, both men secured work in a dining and joke in various parts of the city, and finally obtained the contract for an excavation in the suburban portion of the city. While working on the contract, they broke their wheelbarrow, and taking it to a blacksmith shop on Main and Twentieth streets for repairs, fell into conversation with one of the workmen. The latter was inquired as to the place from which the boys came, and finding that they were from Marshalltown asked if they knew the Mack boys. The twins answered that they knew the boys well, and on being asked for their address gave that of their brother-in-law, a well-to-do farmer living in the suburbs of Kansas City. The workman who was the brother of the twins, and who had been reported dead, was thunderstruck at the intelligence, and immediately left for the residence of his brother-in-law, where he arrived in time to see the twins, who had gone to work, return to dinner. The meeting between Eighteenth and Ninteenth streets.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

THE architects of the city of Paris were surprised, on taking possession of the palace of the Tuileries, to find it inhabited in every nook and corner. Numerous families were found living in the wings of the river front. Many of them had occupied the quarters for generations; some dated back their residence to the time of the restoration; in 1830; and at the time of the fire in 1871 they took refuge in the wing from which they have just now been ejected to make room for the municipal council. But the most extraordinary thing was that in the imperial stables, with their marble troughs and mahogany mangers and racks, were found numerous comfortable apartments, who have for many years been gratuitously stabled there.

IN Baltimore there are forty pencil-packing establishments. Few, if any, of those houses employ a less number of hands than 250, while several of them reach 500 or 1,000, and these are exclusive of those engaged in the manufacture of the cans and the packing cases.

ENGLISH iron ore will be a new feature of our imports this year. American ores having risen $1.50 per ton, owing to the great demand from our blast furnaces. Orders for nearly 50,000 tons have been sent to mining companies on the west coast of Great Britain.

THE FLOODS IN SPAIN.

A Terrible Invasion—Entire Towns Swept Away, and Thousands of Lives Lost.

A London special of the 24th to the New York Herald gives the following graphic account of the terrible effects of the recent heavy rains and floods in Spain:

Full news has been beyond to the papers this morning of the terrible floods that have visited the valleys of the Mundo and Segura. Murcia is little known to travellers in Spain, for the Mediterranean steamers touch at Alicante to the south of it, and at Cartagena to the northof it. The town is full of Moorish reminiscences, the cathedral perhaps of the Cathedral, the two palaces and many stone mansions in its possession, its horseshoe-shaped windows, its slender spires, recall the days when La Cava was one of the most Moorish possessions in Spain. The lowness summer has been unusually hot. Even this torrid region had known no such heat for a generation. For months not a cloud had been seen, not a drop of rain had fallen, the dust had not had the power to rise from the roads. The river had been, as the Spaniards say, hard, and to many of those that lie in the seemed extinct. carriages would drive through its rugged bed, passing banks of tall bamboos. On Tuesday last few people ventured to beg the friends they met on the previous day in the evening there was a general movement of merchants. Rich country houses in the Alameda, which stands high, and from which the view extends over the river and the plain, began to fill as the hills. It was about ten o'clock when the appearance of a cloud and lightning was seen from the direction of Cartagena. The sky became dark. The heat increased. Then a withering air blew and needles, as if the ground burned, pattered upon the roofs. A storm was brewing over the town and amid the streets, and the heat and the dust became increased in existence every minute. The rain seemed to be falling in large sheets of water. No such tempest had been seen within the memory of the inhabitants.

Shortly after midnight the second watch-man was heard crying, as he passed through the bridge, that the river was rising rapidly. It had already overflowed the banks, and was already blocking every door of the lower portion of the town. A scene of terror ensued. The inhabitants rushed into the streets. Few of them had time to dress their wives by a little clothing. Down the main street, the Calle del Caballeros, rushed affrighted women, shrieks of startled children swallowed from the opposite quarters. Peasants in their long white hats added to the confusion by the prevalent pronunciado. The multitude at once proceeded to organize assistance for that part of the town which was already being beneath the waters of the river. "Save the aisnal," was one of the sufferers, "we could get the children out of the water tearing out in the gardens, as far as the eye could reach there was a sea of water, in which the tops of palm-trees waved their branches, and where villas lay submerged, the houses of country men, laundry steams went hurrying along, carrying with them whole families, cattle, wagons and farms all shared the same fate.

No information could be obtained from the streets as the roads were impassable. The line of railroad to the north was down, and all the telegraphs had ceased to exist. The names of many were uttered in behalf. Late in the day went weeping from house to house, seeking their members who had been swept away. Families there were which had not one member left to mourn, as the last report of the day. Persons, civil guards and volunteers of all classes sallied out in carriages and on horseback, and very soon returned to say that the country was covered with dead bodies, and the coming of mud and debris on the once cultivated plains. Fra Ana there and Monfuenosa were a heap of ruins, from the tops of which rose the spires of their churches and the gables of a few of the largest houses, where inhabitants had crowded, and spending the night upon the roofs. Bonigalva, Lorca and Totana are said not to have suffered less than the other villages of the plain. As for the hamlets and farms, they completely disappeared, the last cause of building and dead bodies. Within these places are huddled and awful corpses had been brought in and laid by one another and forty-two others which had been taken from the riverside houses. In many parts of the Vega the stench was so great that the authorities thought it prudent to attempt any explanation for the victims.

The work was carried on by night to a certain extent for the purpose. All day long through the streets of death, stirring it among piles a familiar face. Some of the sufferers had already made preparations for the burial, and masked men were said hurrying along the streets, and boys bearing crosses and flags with religious hieroglyphics. It was as though a plague had visited the town. Never had Murcia and the valleys known such a disaster since the deluge of 1651 and 1651.

At Alicante, the chief commercial port of Valencia, the whole plain is covered with ruin-ing natives, which from a lake nearly thirty leagues in extent. The inundation passed over the newest and most valuable portion of the town, Alicante is inland streamed through its main avenue in a manner that surprised and overwhelmed the inhabitants. Houses and shops were carried away bodily. Even this torrent is said to have been exceeded in violence by the rivers of the mountains. Many of the houses in the suburbs were built of sun-dried bricks, and crumbled away like sugar. Those of stone and mortar remained standing, but were filled to the roofs with mud and debris. Even the Alameda, which stands high, and from which the view extends over the river and the plain, was flooded as the hills. It was about ten o'clock when the appearance of a cloud and lightning was seen from the direction of Cartagena. The sky became dark. The heat increased. market, or else of satin or thick Sicilienne. Rich passementerie, sparkling with jet, is profusely employed on the more costly garments, while simple wraps, scarcely less expensive, are plainly bordered with fur or with heavy fringes. The latest novelty fringe is of two sorts, slightly curled, or fan-pressed. This, as already said, is merely un-twisted chenille. Most modes for heading fringes are made of the same material. Fur-lined silk cloaks are made in dolman shape more than in days. Alaskas, Alaskettes and Large have been sweptaway. Monte, Orlando, Lorca and Alicia have been partially flooded. Ten thousand inhabitants are one hundred families are destitute. The loss of property exceeds $10,000,000 francs. The loss of life is already one hundred; at Orihuela, eighty; at Murcia, more than a thousand. These are the official returns; but it is feared the total loss of life will exceed three thousand. The King has already visited the flooded districts, and has subscribed fifty thousand francs toward the relief of the inhabitants.

Particulars of the Cabul Massacre.

The best story of the Cabul massacre is the following, taken down from the lips of some of the survivors and published in the London Standard. Says the writer:

I have just had a long conversation with one of Sir Louis Cavagnari's servants who escaped; he and three others are, as far as is known, the sole survivors of the hideous massacre, of which doubtless you have been already informed by wire. The particulars of the occurrence are as follows: At about 8 o'clock on the 3d crowds of armed Afghan soldiery were perceived rushing toward the residency. Sir Louis, who was, as he suspected something, as he ordered all the Sowars inside, and had the gates closed. Soon a vast mob of four thousand men had collected. The gate was broken down, and in a few seconds the Sowars, though they fought nobly, were borne down by numbers and massacred to a man. A few soldiers, with the four white men, shut the assault of the infuriated throng, who, with wild fanaticism and the exultation of feeling their prey in their grasp, swarmed to the attack. Nothing, no will bring was to be seen in the gallant little band that met and repelled the attack. Again and again did the Afghans, like a resurging wave, forced in by the pressure of those behind, vainly try to win their way into the house. Each effort but increased the heap of slain that fast accumulated round the house. Cowed by their reception, they withdrew to the cover of the houses, walls and houses, and from this vantage-ground poured a hail of lead into every opening in the building. Colonel Hamilton, so lately adorned with the Victoria cross, adorned it with his heroic bravery. He exposed himself unhesitatingly to the hottest fire, for as Jenkins said, "he was an Indian" and "didn't mind bullets." He was killed by a ball from his own pistol, which was wrested from his hand by the force of the bullet as it struck him. Cavagnari, wounded, still fought on, but he was overpowered

Next to those was living a scholar named Chin, who was waiting for the next examinations, and occupying himself meanwhile as a schoolmaster. Constantly seeing the girl, he took a fancy to her.

The future father-in-law, Chen, finding the girl was not sent back to his house, and hearing a rumor of Chin's attentions, began to suspect that Yu was trying to break off the match, and summoned the dust and nuggets they've saw and left."

"So, said Zeph, winkin' one eye; "but we kin strategize 'em."

"How?" I say. "Don't kinder see it. They're too deep to be done."

"Yaki" say Zeph, "tuny's beeutt oz dere; oz n Cawsecond plate. Give me the tissue and I'll sell the lot, and get a good pocketful o' dollars or dust in every man's pocket—six on us?"

"But what means d' ye want? I say.

"One handful o' dust," say Zeph.

"This is how," say Zeph. "Morrow mornin' every man hyar's got to go round the camp and nudge. Tell the boys we're hard up, but we've got a good thing on. They'll subscribe a little—five dollars apiece, I reckon."

"Well, we'll try," say we; and we went to sleep hungry and got up ravenous.

There was boddin' for it but to go to work, and off we went, getting back to our land about eleven o'clock, when five out of the lot had got a little dust. I was the unlucky one, bein' a bad beggar, and had got none.

"Now, then," say Tom Paggins, as soon as the dust was all put together—about a big spoonful of glitterin' stuff; "let's go up to the store and get a drink."

"That you just won't," say Zeph, grinnin'. "I'm kinder goin' to throw all this here dust away—I'm goin' to sow it, boys, for a crop to come up."

We all grumbled, for we were mighty hungry; but we all had a kind of trust in Zeph, and gave way.

"Lookee hyar, lads," he say; "it's just twelve o'clock now, so let's go round and git a mouthful where we can."

"Let's go up to Billy Bolly's store," and we took to give us a square meal, and stick it up," I say. "He'll trust us."

"Think he would?" say Zeph.

"Sartain," I say. If you show him that gold, and tell him there's somethin' good on."

"Then we washed a bit more earth gravelly, quartzy stuff it was—and collected again; and then we grew excited, and began to dig faster, and to wash more, and examine what we had done each time after pickin' over the pan, throwin' out the rubbish; and when this fell, yew could see a few specks o' gold dust glitterin' in the sun, while the pan was got what I'd call a leathering as Tom Paggins held.

"We marks out this here claim as our'n," say Zeph, our lead; and takin' a shovel, he chops out a bit of a rough trench, just to show the extent we meant to her; and as he did so first one pigtail and then another came out to watch us, and I saw them look at the specks of gold in amongst the refuse we had thrown over the side beyond our claim.

"No goods, eh?" say Zeph.

"Oh, no; none at all, Mister Teapot," say Zeph. "Just yew keep a bit further off or—"

He touched his six-shooter, and the Chinamen scurried back a little ways, while one of us fetched some water, and we began to wash another shovelful of earth.

"I pass out fifty," say Tom Paggins, out loud, as we grabbed round once more, and the top refuse, with specks o' gold in, was thrown away again.

We kept on at it for two hours, and with Zeph to manage, we washed out that little lot o' gold we had borrowed about four times; but it was a good deal less at the last than when we started, for some of it was sprinkled in each o' the holes we made, and half a teaspoonful o' dust was lyin' to waste in the refuse.

All this time the Chinees were comin' up from their lot of a camp, about a hundred yards away. Zeph was awful jealous, and kep' drivin' 'em away—not as we were skeart of 'em, for they're a quiet, peaceful lot, but to keep us in play.

Then half on us went down below, and got one tent and odds and ends, and set up as if we meant to stay; while the others went on washin' and pickin' steadily, gettin' four Chinees to fetch water, and to do a few rough jobs in movin' quartz blocks outer the way.

"Somehow on other there were a few specks o' gold under each o' those blocks that the Chinees warrant on; and when that was done Zeph gave the sunlin' chaps a bit o' gold each, and sent one on 'em with some dust to buy tobacco.

"It's a workin'!" say Zeph to me.

"Think so?" I say.

"Wait a bit, old boss, and yew'll see!"

"That night, after we'd been a bit nasty and threatenin' to the tenants, who kept lovin' their work, we could hear a deal o' chatterin' goin' on; and blimeby a kinder deppytation of six on 'em come up, headed by a smilin' cuss who looked like a big fat boy.

"Newy, then, say Zeph, 'tell you what; if we don't make yew reckon we're there'll be leden tarew come on yew?"

"Four Chinamen!" say the big fat fellow; and he put his head on one side and smiled his head half off. Then t'other five says, in a sorter o' whinin', sing-song chorus, "Four Chinaman!" and all half smiled their heads off.

"Don't want any to-day," say Zeph. "Look us!"

"We all sat smokin' and lookin' on, and every man with his hand on revolver and t'owie, as of we was suspicious.

"Poor Chinaman!' whines the big one again.

"Don't want any, I tell yew again! Joars Zeju, savagely; and the deppytation only bobbs their heads on one side and whines.

"Ah! yew gaine to cut?' say Zeph, sezin nuinber one by the tail, when he goes down in the direction of the claim, same, rubbin' their cheeks and waggin' their heads from side to side.

"Why don't yew speak out?' say Zeph.

"Melicannan let poor Chinaman washee washee?' say the fat fellow, pitifle' to the bend of rubbish.

"You want to wash that dirt over again?' say Zeph.

"No, no!' we all growled.

"Send 'em off!' say Piggins.

"But they wouldn't go, only smiled, and at last Zeph seemed to be struck with a notion; and the long and short of it was that, if we'd allow 'em to wash our refuse over again the Chinese'd make the claim worth our while to load water up to our claim.

"Well, that's no good, Zeph,' I say, as soon as they were gone.

"Wait a bit, lad, an' yew'll see,' says Zeph, with a wink; and we sat down to the pleasant task of smokin', while there was evidently a mighty commotion in the Chinese camp, and before long the deppytation came back.

"Four Chinaman!' say the fat chap again.

"Oh, yes; we know all 'beout that!' say Zeph. 'Now; what is it?'

We had to wait a bit while the fat fellow went up to the tents, and then the others came down in a string, each with a big bundle on his back.

"Will we sell you this claim for two hundred dollars?' say Zeph.

They all nodded till yew'd ha' thought their heads'd come off.

"Cash?' say Zeph, catching hold of the fat on my his tail and kickin' him.

"Yew mayn't believe, gents, but them same chaps came back twice before it was dark and made fresh offers, advancin' a hundred dollars each time, and we swore as we'd sell 'em, and said we wouldn't sell, and if they warn't up to time in the mornin' to see about the water, they shouldn't be allowed to wash their refuse.

"First thing next morning them six fellers were up again, just as we had got a good pailful of stuff in course o' workin', and I saw their eyes twinkle as they caught sight o' the gold.

"Then they offered five hundred dollars, and we said we'd shook 'em up if they'd come again; but come they did, and offered six hundred dollars, and on the mornin' went on seven hundred dollars, eight hundred dollars, nine hundred dollars—a thousand dollars.

"Take it," we said, as they name this last time.

"They'll give two thousand, I tell yew. I'm sure they will, sez Zeja.

"But one thousand's enough in chisel the beggars out of," sez I.

"Yes," sez Tom Paggins; "and it 'll be all this same tomorrow sure nuges up to the two thousand."

"If I warn't so tarnal hungry, I'd hold out," say Zeph, hesitatin'; and then, turnin' to the six Chinees as was waitin' for our answer: 'Look hyar, you chestin' cusses,' he say, takin' up a shovelful of stuff, in which the dust were a sparklin' in the sun, 'this claim's worth twenty thousand dollars!'

"Uh, only worth tousand dollar,' said fatty, shakin' his head.

"Shall we let 'em have it, boys?' sez Zeph, turnin' to us.

"Yes, let 'em have it," I sez. "We can find plenty more."

"Come on, then,' sez Zeph; and us and two more went back with the deppytation to the tent of their headman, and a thousand dollars' worth o' dust and nuggets was weighed out into a bag; Zeph put his mark on a kind o' duckynent in Chinee; and, half an hour after, we went back to camp, leavin' the sunlin' Chinamen to their purchase.

"It's a blamed shame to cheat the poor, innocent babies like that,' I say.

"Not it!' sez Zeph. "It's only like playin' poker with 'em, sid winnin'. Let's go and liquor.'

We didn't expeck any row, for them Chinees had to keep very quiet for fear o' bein' sent off; and Zeph said they'd put up with their loss, clear out, and go to some other gulch.

"But they didn't; for next day Tom, who went up to see what they was a' doin', sez they'd moved their camp up round the bend, and were sarkin away like a swarm o' bees.

"That night, as we were settin' smokin' at Billy's store, some chaps strolls in, and one of 'em sez, in a kind of a temper:

"I'all this here a free country?'

"Yes, stranger, I drew,' sez Zeph, rattling some nuggets in his pocket; 'who sez it ain't?'

"I do,' sez the new comer. 'There are we workin' like sinners for a few dollars worth o' dust, and a pack o' heathen Chinee comes and settles down and grabs all the best on it!'

"Dew they?' sez Zeph, winking at us.

"Yes,' he sez, 'they dew. There's that pack o' Chinees moved up higher in the gulch, and they've hit on a big pocket. They got a two pound nugget int this very afternoon.'

"A two-pound nugget, and the stuff's meaning one awfull. I saw it's a shame, and Government ought to stop it.'

"Sobli!' groaned Zeph.

Next day it was the talk o' the place. The Chinees were panning out, and at a tremendyus rate from their claim, and there was talk o' drivin' the heathens away, but the party of order was too strong, and they knew'd if the rowdies was allowed to get the upper hand here they'd be just as likely to seize anybody else's claim; so it was decided to temporize with the heathen, and try to buy the claim.

"They were two hundred strong up there; and when we went up to see the place—which we did in a kind of desperate feelin'—the fat chap smiled and clapped his hands, and gave Zeph a little casual nugget as big as a pea.

"A meetin' was held, and we concluded to make a company and buy back the claim. Twenty thousand was the most we was to be offered.

"Twenty thousand dollars!' groaned Zeph. 'Oh, boys, what fools we was! But I did want to hold out for two thousand.'

"Well, then, sez Tom, 'let's go in for shares as far as our money goes.'

The money was nearly all subscribed, but we got one for eight hundred dollars, and would ha' sold our share to anybody who'd come up with the most effectivly, for Kelly was but a little at last accounts.

AN ARGUMENT.

As one by one, among their many ways,
The Kisses of youth fade in the heat and die,
And of our joining the sapphire-set high
Remorseless circumstances crush and slay,
There, "Heaven" to our fainting hearts we say,
Is that this fits the scanty opinants do
We, if there shall all be ours, again to try
The bright new world beyond the perfect sky.

Land of the thereafter! can it be,
When hourly sacred keeping we commit
All our best treasures as confiding
Our dead, our hopes, our souls, down in
With upward eyes and unconcerning
And life, our plastic use all a myth, a dream?

INDIAN SUMMER.

1. Warrior robes of gorgeous dyes
The groves in splendor flaunt;
And the monarch of autumn sees his reign
Is near its close at hand.

2. The shrunken, lingering, silent streams
With mirrored banks are filled;
A steadfast sky encompasseth
This tranquil earth—as if death.

3. The golden rod's bright rounded sheaf
For Winter's use is stored;
His chariot Autumn deftly wastes,
And strews the path with fallen leaves.

4. Thus moves he, onward silently,
With kisses softer than the air,
To those of deeper, wondrous die,
The breath of some serene decay.

5. But such decay as seems asleep,
Whose Hope is more than Fear,
The death, O Year, seems sweetest for
Thus all the joys you wear.

ZEPH PARKER'S STRATAGEM.

"Scoopy, baby-faced set o'people! Air they? Baby-faced enough, but bad I tell you, sirree, that I believe they're 'bout born with all their spunk each out in their mental jaws, and you've got to get up airly, sir, if you want to take in a Yankee."

The speaker was a hard-faced, indigo-jawed gentleman, in a gloss black suit, which fitted him very badly, and a watch-guard that was made in the sunk-room of the Continental Prison. He was to be seen daily, and he was supposed to have stolen the rockytators fits in lieu." He also worked a very powerful to have made a fortune in petroleum. At all events he had plenty of money, and was very generous in the spending of it.

The conversation had turned on the recent Chinese question, and he had struck fatal with the remarks above.

"I reck'lect," he said, "ther was Zeph Parker. He was a deep 'un, was Zeph! He was long o' me and a few more up in Calaveras, during the time of the silver craze. The boys had been washing for gold; honest-like, now gittin' it out of pockets, now outen the creek, and then Zeph 'd done with a bit o' wash dirt, and gone off to another claim. Master Washee Washee Chinee would come over and go over the dirt after them, and be satisfied with what he got. Then comes the silver craze. All on us goes off and leaves all we'd made in gold, gits no silver, and comes back disappinted to try after the gold again.

"Gives as rough try, and try again, but no gold could we get; and all 'beout as was then smooth-faced, pig-tailed Celestian, gittin' on prosperous and contented.

"I tell yew,' said Zeph, 'I shall go and murder one o' them smilin' teapots. I can't stand it much longer!'

"This here was in our bit of a tent, where we was restin' to make ourselves happy, playin' poker on credit, and keepin' in season.

"What for?' I sez.

"What for!' cries Zeph. 'Dew yew think that I can enjoy myself sittarin of a free country, am gwine to sit down and be robbed o' my mess o' golden pottage by a pack o' vanilla washee-washee-faced, opium-smokin', celestial lizards? No, sirree, this dog's gwine to bite!

"But I don't kinder see what this dog's gwine to bite for,' I sez. 'Teapot ain't done nuthin to you.

"Mistery,' sez Zeph, getting on the barrel in his knowin' way, 'things has come to a purty pass with us, heven't they?'

"Right, old hoss,' sez some one, lashmenin the chair legs as he had been on table.

"No!"

"No!"

"Has any man got any dust?

"No!"

"Any flour, or pork, or boots, or new blankets?

"No, no, no, no!"

"Then them Chinees hez,' continued Zeph; 'and what I sez is this—so it is a sin and a shame to let a pack o' heathenish cusses like them teapots as never goes to churches nor listens to parsons—'

"I says, Zeph,' sez some one, 'when did you go to meetin' last?'

"Never you mind,' sez Zeph, 'and don't interrupt a man as wants to give you sellin' to eat. A set o' cusses, I sez, as never goes to meetin', and believes in nuthin' but joss-house. I say, it's a sin to let 'em be gittin' fat on our land, while we're as thin and starved-lookin' as we is.'

"As sin Zeph Parker himself,' sez Tom Paggins.

"Wal, sez thin sez I, an, if you like, sez Zeph.

"This is all very purty,' I sez, 'but we can't go and take a claim from the teapots, Zeph; nor we can't rush 'em, and sunny the dust and nuggets they've washed out.'

"No,' sez Zeph, winkin' one eye; "but we kin strategize 'em."

"How?" I say. "Don't kinder see it. They're too deep to be done.'

"Yaki' say Zeph, 'tuny's beeutt oz dere; oz n Cawsecond plate. Give me the tissue and I'll sell the lot, and get a good pocketful o' dollars or dust in every man's pocket—six on us?'

All this time the Chinees were comin' up from their bit of a camp, about a hundred yards away. Zeph was awful jealous, and kep' drivin' 'em away—not as we were skeart of 'em, for they're a quiet, peaceful lot, but to keep us in play.

Then half on us went down below, and got one tent and odds and ends, and set up as if we meant to stay; while the others went on washin' and pickin' steadily, gettin' four Chinees to fetch water, and to do a few rough jobs in movin' quartz blocks outer the way.

"Somehow on other there were a few specks o' gold under each o' those blocks that the Chinees warrant on; and when that was done Zeph gave the sunlin' chaps a bit o' gold each, and sent one on 'em with some dust to buy tobacco.

"It's a workin'!" say Zeph to me.

"Think so?' I sez.

"Wait a bit, old boss, and yew'll see!"

"That night, after we'd been a bit nasty and threatenin' to the tenants, who kept lovin' their work, we could hear a deal o' chatterin' goin' on; and blimeby a kinder deppytation of six on 'em come up, headed by a smilin' cuss who looked like a big fat boy.

"Newy, then, say Zeph, 'tell you what; if we don't make yew reckon we're there'll be leden tarew come on yew?'

"Four Chinaman!' sez the big fat fellow; and he put his head on one side and smiled his head half off. Then t'other five says, in a sorter o' whinin', sing-song chorus, "Four Chinaman!" and all half smiled their heads off.

"Don't want any to-day," say Zeph. "Look us!"

"We all sat smokin' and lookin' on, and every man with his hand on revolver and t'owie, as of we was suspicious.

"Poor Chinaman!' whines the big one again.

"Don't want any, I tell yew again! Joars Zeju, savagely; and the deppytation only bobbs their heads on one side and whines.

"Ah! yew gaine to cut?' sez Zeph, sezin nuinber one by the tail, when he goes down in the direction of the claim, same, rubbin' their cheeks and waggin' their heads from side to side.

"Why don't yew speak out?' say Zeph.

"You want to wash that dirt over again?' say Zeph.

"The whole party began to nod their heads fast.

"No, no!' we all growled.

"Send 'em off!' say Piggins.

"But they wouldn't go, only smiled, and at last Zeph seemed to be struck with a notion; and the long and short of it was that, if we'd allow 'em to wash our refuse over again the Chinees'd make the claim worth our while to load water up to our claim.

"Well, that's no good, Zeph,' I sez, as soon as they were gone.

"Wait a bit, lad, an' yew'll see,' says Zeph, with a wink; and we sat down to the pleasant task of smokin', while there was evidently a mighty commotion in the Chinese camp, and before long the deppytation came back.

"Four Chinaman!' sez the fat chap again.

"Oh, yes; we know all 'beout that!' sez Zeph. 'Now; what is it?'

We had to wait a bit while the fat fellow went up to the tents, and then the others came down in a string, each with a big bundle on his back.

"Will we sell you this claim for two hundred dollars?' sez Zeph.

"Cash?' say Zeph, catching hold of the fat on my his tail and kickin' him.

"Yew mayn't believe, gents, but them same chaps came back twice before it was dark and made fresh offers, advancin' a hundred dollars each time, and we swore as we'd sell 'em, and said we wouldn't sell, and if they warn't up to time in the mornin' to see about the water, they shouldn't be allowed to wash their refuse.

"First thing next morning them six fellers were up again, just as we had got a good pailful of stuff in course o' workin', and I saw their eyes twinkle as they caught sight o' the gold.

"Then they offered five hundred dollars, and we said we'd shook 'em up if they'd come again; but come they did, and offered six hundred dollars, and on the mornin' went on seven hundred dollars, eight hundred dollars, nine hundred dollars—a thousand dollars.

"Take it," we said, as they name this last time.

"They'll give two thousand, I tell yew. I'm sure they will, sez Zeja.

"But one thousand's enough in chisel the beggars out of,' sez I.

"Yes,' sez Tom Paggins; 'and it 'll be all this same tomorrow sure nuges up to the two thousand."

"If I warn't so tarnal hungry, I'd hold out,' sez Zeph, hesitatin'; and then, turnin' to the six Chinees as was waitin' for our answer: 'Look hyar, you chestin' cusses,' he sez, takin' up a shovelful of stuff, in which the dust were a sparklin' in the sun, 'this claim's worth twenty thousand dollars!'

"Uh, only worth tousand dollar,' said fatty, shakin' his head.

"Shall we let 'em have it, boys?' sez Zeph, turnin' to us.

"Yes, let 'em have it," I sez. "We can find plenty more."

"Come on, then,' sez Zeph; and us and two more went back with the deppytation to the tent of their headman, and a thousand dollars' worth o' dust and nuggets was weighed out into a bag; Zeph put his mark on a kind o' duckynent in Chinee; and, half an hour after, we went back to camp, leavin' the sunlin' Chinamen to their purchase.

"It's a blamed shame to cheat the poor, innocent babies like that,' I sez.

"Not it!' sez Zeph. "It's only like playin' poker with 'em, sid winnin'. Let's go and liquor.'

We didn't expeck any row, for them Chinees had to keep very quiet for fear o' bein' sent off; and Zeph said they'd put up with their loss, clear out, and go to some other gulch.

"But they didn't; for next day Tom, who went up to see what they was a' doin', sez they'd moved their camp up round the bend, and were sarkin away like a swarm o' bees.

"That night, as we were settin' smokin' at Billy's store, some chaps strolls in, and one of 'em sez, in a kind of a temper:

"I'all this here a free country?'

"Yes, stranger, I drew,' sez Zeph, rattling some nuggets in his pocket; 'who sez it ain't?'

"I do,' sez the new comer. 'There are we workin' like sinners for a few dollars worth o' dust, and a pack o' heathen Chinee comes and settles down and grabs all the best on it!'

"Dew they?' sez Zeph, winking at us.

"Yes,' he sez, 'they dew. There's that pack o' Chinees moved up higher in the gulch, and they've hit on a big pocket. They got a two pound nugget int this very afternoon.'

"A two-pound nugget, and the stuff's meaning one awfull. I saw it's a shame, and Government ought to stop it.'

"Sobli!' groaned Zeph.

Next day it was the talk o' the place. The Chinees were panning out, and at a tremendyus rate from their claim, and there was talk o' drivin' the heathens away, but the party of order was too strong, and they knew'd if the rowdies was allowed to get the upper hand here they'd be just as likely to seize anybody else's claim; so it was decided to temporize with the heathen, and try to buy the claim.

"They were two hundred strong up there; and when we went up to see the place—which we did in a kind of desperate feelin'—the fat chap smiled and clapped his hands, and gave Zeph a little casual nugget as big as a pea.

A meetin' was held, and we concluded to make a company and buy back the claim. Twenty thousand was the most we was to be offered.

"Twenty thousand dollars!' groaned Zeph. 'Oh, boys, what fools we was! But I did want to hold out for two thousand.'

"Well, then, sez Tom, 'let's go in for shares as far as our money goes.'

The money was nearly all subscribed, but we got one for eight hundred dollars, and would ha' sold our share to an

United States Senator Zachariah Chandler was found dead in the bed at the Grand Pacific Hotel in Chicago, on the morning of the 1st. He arrived in Chicago the previous morning from Wisconsin, where he had been making campaign political speeches, and addressed a large assemblage of people at McCormick Hall the night of his death. The Chicago Tribune of the morning of the 2d gives the following account of the discovery of the Senator's death and the statement of Mr. Spalding, an intimate friend of the deceased, as to what had occurred in Mr. Chandler's experience during the few days preceding his sudden and entirely unexpected death:

Mr. Joseph Smith, the hotel porter, who had been the first to discover the fact of the Senator's sudden death, stated that at seven o'clock in the morning Mr. Spalding requested him to go to Room No. 5 and wake the gentleman sleeping therein, and had no doubt the person was, and—as quite unprepared for the terrible sight presented to his gaze on entering the room. He knocked at the door of the room, but received no response. He knocked again, but still there was no answer. Thinking that the man inside was a remarkably heavy sleeper, he knocked a third time, very loudly, but only perfect silence prevailed in the room.

He then began to have misgivings, and, finding that he had not been placed in the door by the occupant Mr. Chandler had gone to his bedroom by way of the parlor, he took the other key which he had with him, and opened the door. When he entered he found the Senator half sitting, half lying upon the bed, his legs hanging over the side, his right foot on the ground, and the left foot placed a little or so above it. He struck slightly against it unnoticed, for the sleeping figure, but found it stiff and cold. He then felt the hands and face, and saw at once that the supposed sleeper was dead. Greatly startled by his discovery, he ran down stairs and told Mr. Gardner of what he had seen. Mr. Gardner then followed Smith and ascended to the room.

The following statement of Jesse Spalding, who was with him the whole time, covers almost all the swerved during the last forty-eight hours of the Senator's life:

"I went up on Thursday to Janesville," said Mr. Spalding, "to hear him speak, and came down with him Friday morning. He was as well as usual. He spoke in a tent at Janesville, just out of town, on the political issues of the afternoon and evening—and there was a vast gathering. He was in excellent spirits all the time. I sat on the platform with him the evening until 1 [illegible] uncomfortably cold, and then said to him, 'I will go down to the hotel and have a big bath in my room and wait for you.' He came after the speaking was over between nine and ten o'clock, and sat by the fire in the parlor. Friends called and spent an hour. He complained of being cold. We then went to our room, and had a fire to be put out there for a half to three-quarters of an hour. He was then in bed more than half an hour and felt very comfortable. He was in excellent health. He said nothing about his heart troubling him, or that he had ever had any trouble with it. I inclined that he looked pale, and asked whether, don't you feel well? He said, 'Yes, I will in a minute.' This pain in my chest troubles me.' The room was a little warm, and I said, 'I will open the door a minute, and cool us.' A minute after that he said, 'I feel just as well as I ever did.'

"Mr. W. J. Lawrence sat at dinner [illegible] and asked me to dine with him at six o'clock. Mr. Henry Schneider had called in the forenoon, and we invited him to dine with us, and we took dinner together at two o'clock. At the Senator's invitation Mr. Mr. Lawrence, instead of taking a carriage, went to see us at ballpost six or seven o'clock, and had a drive. I was not very well that day. When he came back he was in excellent health and spirits. After the carriage he referred to the pain in his chest.

"After supper he proposed to me to ride in the carriage and meet in his room. Mr. Sam Dalrymple, President of the Young Men's Auxiliary Club, met us at the elevator. I went up to the room and remained with the Senator until half-past eleven o'clock. He laughed and joked some jokes, and remarked: 'I am fully satisfied now that I have a secure call while speaking in the tent at Janesville, but I feel comfortable now.' That was said in a way to convey the impression as to whether I should say with him. I didn't say that because of his feeling unwell, but simply to keep him company. He said, 'You and I were up late last night. You go home and get a good night's sleep.' I said, 'I will, and you must go to bed.' He said that he was going to get a good night's sleep. I then told him and left him. I never got to see that he was awake at all. At the time he wanted to be called further than that I was not aware. My office is here [now called to room] and as soon as I take the time I shall express to the Michigan Central for Detroit. He asked, 'Does the train leave at nine o'clock?' I said 'Yes.' He got up from the table and picked up a paper from the table, and saw that the paper [illegible] and said, 'That is the train I want to go on.'

"I then shook hands with him and said I wished him a safe journey home, and hoped he would find his family well. Heard, 'I thank you and the President of that Young Men's Club for the attention you have shown me.' He had stated Friday afternoon that the speech he was to make in Chicago was to congratulate Democrats. A few minutes after he had made the statement I congratulated him on the success it and result, and handed it to me, I said, 'Mr. Senator, don't you feel well?'

Mr. Chandler had gone to bed in company by way of the night, he thought, by which he had with him and secreted in the bed. When he entered he found the senator sitting on the edge of the bed, with his head resting against the wall, his right hand on the floor, and his left on the bed. He was dressed in his night clothes, and his feet were bare. He seemed to be sound asleep, and was quite unconscious of the presence of the porter. Mr. Smith, however, was not long in coming to the conclusion that the senator was dead. According to the Edinburg Review, the Rev. Dr. Livingstone, when he was last heard from was in a small inland town where he was treated to slight assistance

How the News of Senator Chandler's Death Was Received in Detroit.

From The Post and Tribune.

The first intelligence of the death of Mr. Chandler reached the city early in the morning in a telegram from John B. Drake, of the Grand Pacific Hotel, in Chicago, to Editor Keeler, of The Post. When the despatch was delivered at Mr. Keeler's residence none of the family had yet risen from their beds, and the message was opened by Mr. Keeler himself. As he read it he could hardly believe his eyes, and he went to the room where Mrs. Chandler was sleeping and aroused her. He then hastened down to The Post establishment on Washington avenue and delivered the message to the proprietor.

At about the same time a despatch from Senator Spalding, chairman of the Republican committee of Chicago, announced to John S. Newberry, Dr. H. D. Farrand, chairman of the Wayne county Republican committee, was delivered to Mr. Newberry and startled him with the sad intelligence. Soon thereafter the patch of wire[less] carried the news to Chicago to The Post and Tribune office and promptly published.
